Preface

When in 1969 I was asked to co-edit a book on the Rancho Families of Southern California in conjunction with California's bicentennial celebration, I enthusiastically responded, "Yes." On completing Saddleback Ancestors, I thought, "Why don't I do the same for my own and my husband's ancestors?" Here, now, more than thirty years later is the long-promised Pearlman Family Connections.

Sincere thanks go to my deceased husband, Carl Kenneth Pearlman, who while taking only a passing interest in these endeavors, nonetheless put me in touch with members of the family who could help.

On his paternal side, of special help were Francis (Pearlman) Tigler and Henrietta (Pearlman) Ruderfer. On his maternal side were Israel Herman Levin, who was especially helpful in acquainting me with the organization known as The Descendants of Rabbi Joseph, and Zelda (Krellenstein) Howard, who provided several original documents.

In addition to family members, I wish to acknowledge the help of staff of the Library of Congress and the National Archives as well as the staff of the Family History Library of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, especially of Ken Schleter whose expertise in Polish records was critical.

I am grateful to those individuals who helped me complete the Family Group Records for their immediate families and close connections. And, of course, my children and grandchildren who have heard me through the years saying, "I must get out the Pearlman Family Connections."

IN MEMORY OF
CARL KENNETH PEARLMAN, M. D.

BEGINNING THE SEARCH

PEARLMAN TIES IN EUROPE

Beginning the search for Pearlman Family Connections started with the ambiguous nature of circumstances surrounding the family surname. Was "Pearlman" the name by which the family came into the United States? "No, they came in by another name," ascertained certain relatives. My husband, Carl Kenneth Pearlman, always began such discussions with, "Don't listen to the relatives who maintain that notion."

But I felt that I must listen in order to be complete in my genealogical research, so I began with their assertion that the Pearlman surname in Poland was given as Henault, Einalt, or a similar name. Despite diligent efforts over a period of more than thirty years, I could not find any entries for "Hinalth," "Henault," "Einalt," etc. in the northeastern counties of Lomza and Suwalk gubernias of Russian-occupied Poland, where the family originated.

These relatives even indicated that this was the name by which the family came into the country. I found, however, that the family entered the United States as "Perlman." Jacob Perlman, native of Russia aged 32, entered the United States on 2 July 1890 on the Majestic from Liverpool, England. His son Ike (not Isaac but Ikiel, a nickname for Michael), who came with his father, was apparently missed on the ship's passenger list. Five years later Jacob's brother, "Mendel Perlman," aged 32, entered New York harbor 30 March 1895 on the S. S. Munchen from the port of embarkation, Bremen, with his three "Perlman" nephews, Moische, 13, Ruwen, 11, and Aisik, 8. All were listed as native of Russia.

I therefore hoped that I would find vital records for them as "Perelman" or "Perlman" (as the surname generally appeared in Polish records). Since Jacob "Jenkel's" brother, Menachem Mendel "Max" Pearlman showed his birth origins as Anshe Zembrower (that is, sons of Zambrow), I thought that I would surely find listing of their birth records there. To no avail! Also, Jacob's wife, Sarah Chinca Tuchman was born 13 May 1859 in Wisniewo, a small town nearby with her birth registered in Zambrow. Therefore, I felt quite sure that the record of their marriage about 1875 would be in Zambrow, Lomza Gubernia. But again, nothing was found.

The only family I could find in the vicinity was that of the local rabbi in Szczuczyn, Lomza Gubernia: Rabbi Jdzc Perlman, born about 1797, died 11 November 1866, and his wife, Ester Margolin, born about 1797, daughter of Michel Margolin. The only children I have for them are the following: Beniamin Perlman, married before 1844 Gruna, daughter of Herszk; Rochla Leja Perlman, born about 1826, married _____ Glowanowicz; Chai Perlman, born about 1828, married _____ Szarszowa; Szlomo Perlman, born about 1832, no further information; Moszk Aron Perlman, born about 1834, died 2 October 1866, married Perla Lizlzycow; and twins born 20 July 1840 in Szczuczyn, Sara Toubia Perlman, who apparently died before 1866, and Josef Chaim Perlman, married 1) Chai Seosa _____ in 1860 and 2) Josela Sosia Rubenstein before 1863. It is possible that Jacob Pearlman and his brother Menachem Mendel were grandchildren of Rabbi Jdzc and Ester (Margolin) Perlman, but nothing has been found to substantiate such a lineage.

Although most of the family has lived in the United States since late in the nineteenth century, one must search the northeastern Polish records for the earlier records. It will be left for future generations to discover the European lineage of "our" Pearlmans. Essentially, the records until 1867 were in the Napoleonic format, written in Polish; after that date, while still in the Napoleonic format, they were written in Russian. In many of the registers, both the Julian and the Gregorian dates appear. In the nineteenth century the Julian dates appear twelve days before the Gregorian dates that are currently in use.

Photocopies herein of original certificates, memorial, and marriage contracts have been reduced to fit the space provided. Question marks appear where the script was illegible.

I REMEMBER MAMA

by
Carl K. Pearlman

There was never a time in my memory when Mama did not have all grey or even white hair. When I was a child she did wear a "shetel" or wig according to the orthodox Jewish tradition, which required a married woman to shave her head. My maternal and paternal grandmothers continued this practice all their lives. I can't recall when my mother "liberated" herself and gave up the wig, but this did eventually occur. Perhaps it was after World War I when women began to bob their hair.

She had an infectious smile and an open, attractive face. However, she did walk slightly bent at the waist. I can only surmise that she must have had some arthritic difficulty.

Mama was the guiding light and force which moved all of her children to aspire to great heights. The importance of education was always stressed. She deplored her own lack of it because in the European ghetto education for women was considered to be unnecessary. She could read but not write, except to sign her name. This was in sharp contrast to my father, who could not only read and write exceptionally well, but was an excellent public speaker. He, however, never transmitted the need for education to his children; and it is my impression that if they had become ordinary workers it wouldn't have bothered him.

Periodically, she would announce that she wanted to learn to write and that she might go to night school. We saw no reason, however, why we couldn't teach her. So we would start the lessons, but after a day or two of enthusiasm, other matters would take over. The same process would repeat itself a few months later.

Teachers were "God" to my mother, and if one came into the house she was treated as royalty. More so, if the teachers were Gentile. And, come to think of it, at that time in my grade school there were few Jewish teachers. We children would no more have thought of showing disrespect to a teacher than to the President.

The first-born, Solly, was the prince in the house. He was the original, "My son, the doctor." He could not do wrong even when he got a girl "in trouble." Where Mama got the money to purchase a house, which later served as my brother's office, and money to pay for Solly's medical education, I'll never know. She was always on the verge of not meeting payments for loans but somehow managed to scrape together the money at the last minute. Perhaps she borrowed it from one of the relatives (or my father came through). My father did not smoke or drink but loved to gamble—horses and poker. When he won, he was generous but most of the time he lost, and there were times when I was actually hungry.

When he lost his salary at the races, this would cause a confrontation between my parents; and when Solly was older he threatened to strike my father on one occasion. This was quite traumatic to me.

The mortgage had to be paid in person, and I always accompanied my mother by subway to downtown Manhattan to what at that time seemed like imposing law offices to deliver the money in person.

Although we were poor by present-day standards, we considered ourselves middle class. We knew many truly poor people. My mother quietly helped many unfortunates with money, food, and clothes. No matter who came to the house, food was always offered, even if it meant that we children would have to pretend that we had eaten or were not hungry. Most of the time we simply all had smaller portions.

People would come to my mother for advice on all matters. When Solly became established as a doctor and patients were waiting for him to arrive, she would give them medical advice.

She was the peacemaker in her immediate family and with the in-laws. When her sisters or brother had misunderstandings, she would bring them together again. She seemed to have less hostility and anger than the others. She was the one the others came to in times of trouble.

She was practically a daughter to her in-laws. Although my father and his father did not talk to each other for a number of years, my mother had a very cordial relationship with my grandfather.

She never missed a funeral and would often take me along. For some reason I was selected over my two younger brothers. At the time of "Jahrzeit" or anniversary of a death, she would go to the cemetery and take me along. Then she would pour out her heart to the buried one, generally my two grandmothers, telling them about all the things that had occurred in the past year.

She would cry and this would sort of tear my heart out. I would stand at some distance, sometimes behind a tree so as not to invade her privacy but mostly because the entire situation disturbed me. Being surrounded by death was not a cheerful environment to a young boy imbued with all the superstitions of that milieu.

One of the customs, which stands out in my memory was that after attending a funeral, water had to be poured over the hands before that person could reenter the house.

My father was an agnostic but my mother was religious. She would go to the synagogue on all of the holy holidays and sit in a separate section with the women. She observed the Sabbath and on Friday there was the usual excitement of getting things ready. A Polish woman would come in to clean. My mother could speak Polish and Russian. However, before the cleaning woman came, the house had to be cleaned—otherwise, how would it look for the woman to see us living in a dirty house?

She followed the Jewish dietary laws. We had separate dishes for the milk and meat foods. She salted all the meat in a special crock type jar for the prescribed length of time. For Passover we had to have separate dishes, which were carefully wrapped in newspaper and at the end of the holiday, for the next year. Unwrapping these dishes always filled me with expectation and anticipation. Then she always prepared a drink called "mead" pronounced "med." I believe it was made from raisins or figs and was sweet as well as fermented. The wooden cask was in the cellar, and I always enjoyed the pre-passover preparations when she would let me drink some of the mead to see if it was just right.

On Friday night, the candles were lit and the prayers said by my mother. In preparation for the Sabbath, she had to go shopping for the various fishes that go to make gefilte fish. The routine was unvarying. She would ask me to accompany her to carry the packages. At the fish store the fish were taken out of the tank and clubbed and cleaned. Then the usual haggling over the price with the owner asking more, my mother offering less until the agreed figure was reached. I always felt embarrassed by this, but probably neither would have respected the other if they didn't have this so-called battle of the wits. Then came the chicken, chosen very carefully, which had to be plucked by the "chicken plucker" who was always given a tip.

Every Friday the "Guta Nacht" or "Good Night" man came to the house. He was a bent-over peddler with a slight beard and a basket of candles, matches, and Jahrzeit candles as well as shoe laces. She always purchased something from him so he "could make a living."

As regards eating in restaurants she couldn't understand how we would eat that food because she "knew" how it was prepared in the kitchens. She couldn't understand how we ever survived a fatal type of food poisoning after eating in a restaurant with Solly or my older sisters.

Incidentally, the method of bargaining carried over to all purchases, which was a never-ending source of embarrassment to me. In buying shoes or a suit, the owner would start with one price, my mother would offer another. He came down and she came up. Finally, she would prepare to leave and would put one hand on the doorknob when the storekeeper would make one last offer, at which he was losing money, and then the transaction would be completed to my immense relief. And the shoes or clothes always had to be big enough so that we could grow into it next year. Obviously, we wore them out before the next year arrived.

Mama was quite superstitious. She told us many stories of her childhood and youth in Europe. They believed in the spirits and the evil eye.

She told me stories of pogroms which had left a searing impression on her as well as on me. In telling us stories of her youth in the old country, she repeated one story which seemed to relieve her conscience. Apparently, she was baby sitting one time with several children when one of the babies smothered to death, presumably by a pillow. She apparently assumed the blame for this. From the vantage point of our increased knowledge, I would be inclined to term this one of the unexplained "crib deaths."

She often told us of her voyage across the Atlantic in the steerage. Although this would have constituted extreme hardship to us, she took it as a matter of course. She was grateful to be in a free land even though she worked in sweatshops until her marriage at an early age.

The last four or five years of her life were punctuated by what I now know was cardiac decompensation or cardiac asthma. These were to us frightening and disturbing. At this time Solly had a blond "shiksa" as his mistress. He paid for her apartment and spent many a night there. Mama would often get her attacks at such times, and I would have to call him home. Solly proudly displayed his mistress and this became a talk of the town. I know this bothered my mother and most of the time she tended to believe that this was the kind of affair that would blow over.

She, of course, wanted Solly to get married to, I presume, a nice, Jewish girl. She was always involved in matchmaking and meetings between possible marriage prospects would be arranged. When the mother and girl were invited to the house everyone knew about it and we kids would be in constant attendance so as not to miss anything. What a thrill to us when we turned on the victrola and Solly asked the girl to dance.

In spite of her illness, she carried out all of the household chores until the last few months. She carried out the trash until I took over. My father never lifted a hand around the house. However, he was a hard, faithful worker and put in long hours. In my early years she did all of the laundry, and I helped her scrub the clothes on the old-fashioned scrubbing board. After Solly became a doctor she would send the laundry out but always I felt that she thought this was an extravagance. On Fridays she made the gefilte fish. The various fish, carp, pike, whitefish, etc. had to be chopped up along with the spices and onions. I usually did that and would sneak some mouthfuls of the raw, chopped fish—without knowing it I was following the Japanese custom. Then she would bake the “cholly” or twist and a coffee crumb cake.

Friday night various cousins would come for a visit. Our house was always a gathering place for friends as well. They were made welcome, and Solly was full of good spirits and Joie de vivre. He would play the violin with one of his friends accompanying him at the piano. On Sundays my father would have his cronies over for an afternoon of poker after which my mother would feed them.

On some occasions, I remember well that Mom would take us to visit relatives, always maybe on the weekend. Secondly, she took us to the Yiddish Theatre on Liberty Avenue. The more tears, the more sorrowful the actors, the better time ‘they’ had. If they were all in tears with this melodramatic acting, the better the play, in their opinion, was.

She was always there when there was illness either in the immediate family or in relatives. Uncle Israel was really my great-uncle and was a bachelor. He would visit regularly but was subject to attacks of asthma. At such times he would gravitate to our house and would stay until the attack subsided. Mama would fix the usual steam kettle with the characteristic medicinal odor, which I am sure was nothing more than tincture of bezoin. She also had a set of “bankus” or glass cups, which were applied to the chest or back for any respiratory ailment. This presumably acted as a counter-irritant and from personal experience I am sure I obtained some relief even though it might have been psychological. At any rate, the irritation of the skin drew attention away from the original miseries. Her services were also in demand by the neighbors.

Doctors were held in the highest respect and as healers second only to God. Prof. Louria was spoken of with reverence and the story was often told that when he was old and could not climb to the top floor of the tenements, he would talk to the patients through the window and prescribe the medication after arriving at a diagnosis.

Our parents always belonged to a lodge which had sickness and death benefits. The physicians were poorly paid on a per capita basis, but they still had to make a small charge when coming to the home. I can well remember the routine haggling that went on after a home visit, which to me, even as a child, seemed demeaning.

There was no sex education or discussion of it, and I learned about it from my peers with all the usual distortions. On one occasion my mother did warn me about “bad” girls. Until puberty I knew people had intercourse but did not associate this with parents having children. After I reached puberty, I remember my brother Solly, now a young doctor, giving me a lecture on sex and masturbation, but he was so devious and abstruse that I didn’t even know what he was talking about.

When my mother was not feeling well and confined to bed, she would call on me particularly to rub her back. I always obeyed but it always disturbed me because I developed erotic feelings with subsequent feeling of extreme guilt. I do not know if she was aware of it.

Her last day is vividly etched in my memory. Our two-story house which to her represented achievement, success, and security was one of five which had been condemned by the city in order to build a playground for the adjacent school. The address of the house was 412 Powell Street in Brownsville. We moved to an upper-class neighborhood at 1333 Eastern Parkway. Shortly thereafter she asked me to drive her back to the house to pick up something or to have a last look. As she did so she became short of breath characteristic of her attacks of cardiac asthma. I got her into the car and drove madly back to the house where I barely managed to drag her to her bedroom. Solly arrived shortly thereafter. Her distress continued and she cried out, “Ich starbe” or I’m dying and then closed her eyes for the last time in my arms as I tried to support her.

Her funeral, I remember, turned out to be one of the largest† that I had known up to that time. People we never dreamed knew her came to pay their last respects. It was then that we

Carl K. Pearlman

Papa was somewhat on the short side, of medium weight, and could be considered a handsome man. He always had a mustache, full, covering the entire upper lip. His chin was clean shaven except when he didn't have to work on Sunday and he'd give his face a rest since he used a straight razor to shave. The strop for honing the razor made an excellent weapon to threaten or spank his children. On Sunday, therefore, his face had a stubble of a beard, which was grayish in the last decade of his life.

He liked his children and was proud of them, but he was uncommunicative. We could not be aware of his feelings about us. It was a great surprise to me when I went through his effects after his death. Among other things was a postcard I had sent him when I was a swimming counselor at a camp. He had kept this as a treasured memento. This was a revelation to me.

He was a skillful worker and was always a foreman. I can't recall his missing a day's work because of illness. His teeth were so good that he boasted in his fifties that he could crack nuts with them, and he did.

He enjoyed teasing us younger children, but I can't say that he did anything with us. We occasionally visited the relatives as a family. I have to think hard to remember specific instances. I remember his taking us to the movies on one occasion. On another occasion he took me, Sammy, and Phil on a ferry boat trip to the Statue of Liberty. When the vendor came around with his basket of candies and other goodies, he wouldn't purchase anything for us. He was never one to do any of the chores around the house. As a matter of fact, I always had a workbench in the cellar and handled the necessary repairs.

He was an inveterate gambler, and until the day he died he believed he could figure out a system to beat the horses. I found a little notation book in his effects. He was also a poker player, as well as a pinochle player. He never smoked or drank. However, I am sure he got a heavy dose of nicotine sitting up, playing cards in a smoke-filled room. I remember this well because on many occasions I was sent out to the delicatessen to get sandwiches and drinks, usually celery tonic. I would be rewarded with a tip from the pot. And I always had to purchase cigars, which were popular at that time.

He talked to us very little about his experiences in the old country. I don't know when or where he learned to read or write. I vaguely recollect that he may have gone to night school when he arrived in America. He was excellent at both. He read everything in the newspaper, both the Yiddish and the English ones. His penmanship was superb. He was very particular with his Waterman Fountain Pen, and I used it for a couple of years after his death.

Most of the time he was a fairly happy person, and he liked to kid and tell jokes. But he lacked tact at times by his frankness and brusqueness. He would make a remark when buying a suit to the effect that the tailor who made it ought to have his hands cut off when that tailor might have been in the store. And then when he was annoyed with someone, he wouldn't have anything more to do with them and wouldn't talk to them. I don't recall a time when he was on talking terms with his own father. As a result, my grandfather ignored us, his grandchildren.

I would classify my Pop as penny-pinching, which is understandable in the light of the poverty in his homeland. If he won at the races or at poker, he would become generous and at such times he would splurge on us by buying us some of the necessities such as clothes or shoes. But these were rare events, indeed, and in number I am sure they do not exceed the fingers on one hand.

He was a foreman in a millinery establishment and as such he identified himself with management or the owners. At the start of the third decade in this century there was a drive by the union to organize the workers who were terribly exploited in the sweatshops of that era. When he refused to join the union, some of their goons beat him up, and I remember his bleeding face when they brought him home one afternoon. I don't know if he ever joined the union.

At that time the immigrants who came from the same district in the old country would join together for social reasons, and form lodges as well as loan associations. The lodges had sickness benefits and also purchased one area in a cemetery for the burial of the deceased members. My father was an excellent organizer as well as a public speaker and because of these talents was instrumental in setting up several such organizations. But shortly thereafter some type of disagreement would arise with the other officers or members and he would quite in a huff. This was a recurring pattern.

He had several brothers. Again he was not on speaking terms with the oldest, Rob, who was the most successful, a so-called millionaire, and owner of a silk factory in Paterson, New Jersey. He seemed to be on cordial terms with his other brothers, but I can't recall that he ever socialized with them. The family contacts were maintained mainly through my mother's efforts. He apparently relegated the duties to her and this was a natural since she liked people and was vitally interested in them.

The gambling was a constant source of friction between my parents. In other areas they were compatible. As I recall their marriage was not arranged but a love match. From my vantage point I suspect that at times he was jealous of the attention paid to my brother Solly, the first-born who was an outstanding athlete, captain of the basketball team when they won the city championship, and who was written up with pictures on the sports pages. In addition, Solly was an accomplished violinist and had his own band, which played at the summer hotels. As for the gambling this at times was a serious problem. When my dad lost his salary, there was not enough money to pay the mortgage and on one occasion my lunch consisted of diluted coffee in a bowl.

Pop was an agnostic and would not go to the synagogue even on the high holy Holidays. As a matter of fact, he did not attend my bar mitzvah, which was a source of disappointment. But later he refused to attend my high school graduation ceremonies. By that time I think I had grown resigned to his indifference to things that were important to us.

One time after the death of my mother, we were walking to someplace when out of a clear sky he asked me if I had "had a woman." I was about 16 years of age and that question was very embarrassing to me since never before had we had any type of discussion. I managed to turn the subject to other matters.

All of us children were strongly affected by the death of my mother. The boys respected her wishes to have "Kaddish" said for her soul, and we went to the temple every morning before breakfast and again in the evening and sundown for one whole year. We did not say "Kaddish" for my father since he did not ask for it.

Within a few months after my mother's death he moved out of the house because, as we found out later, he planned to marry again. I don't think any of the children would have objected if he had waited the year of mourning, but in effect, he deserted us. Solly then became the surrogate father and my sister Rae, though still a teenager, became the mother and these two kept the family together.

Papa did not introduce us to the woman he planned to marry, but it was reputed that she had "money." She may have, but as it turned out she wasn't about to part with it. I believe that he later separated from her. I met her once in the mountains, and she was not what I would term an attractive woman. We had no further contact with her.

In the last three or four years of his life, he contracted angina pectoris. For this he collected money—not much—from the insurance company. They did not have social security in those days. In addition, the 1929 depression had set in. In spite of that he would still put his last two dollars on a horse, and he would wheedle a few dollars out of Solly and later out of Sammy, who was assistant manager of a theater and needed every cent he made.

He died in his sleep apparently of a myocardial infarction, a lonely man, living in a furnished room in Borough Park, Brooklyn. His effects were meager as mentioned above, with no notes or a will.

I REMEMBER MAMA AND PAPA

by

Sam Pearlman

1 September 1973

First, Mom to me even though I was very young at the time, she seemed to be a rather short woman, prematurely grey with a round face and a very even, placid disposition. To me she was just a wonderful woman. Her family came first in everything, especially my brother, Solly. She appointed herself his warden. When he would be studying in the downstairs living room by the light of the gas lamp, she would close the sliding doors and place a chair outside to take up her guardianship. Whoever came in would have to remove their shoes, and she always cautioned them about walking very quietly because "the doctor is studying."

She was the counselor of the women of the neighborhood. She could talk many languages fluently and would hold court with these women daily in the afternoon on the porch of the house. She could speak Italian, Polish, Russian, German, and English (not to mention Yiddish) and would discuss all the various problems with these women. I believe that the neighbors went to my mother for advice because she was a good listener. They could talk their hearts out to her. She would sit there with her hands folded over in her lap, and she would keep nodding her head all the time. Half the time I think she was sleeping, but they thought she was listening intently, and they just loved to talk to her. She never interrupted them and let them have their say.

How she did things I will never know because my father never gave her the money that was necessary to support a family; but she seemed to manage all right. We always had plenty of food, but it is just a miracle how she did those things. She raised a rather nice family. She was always very proud of Solly, especially when he did become a doctor, but I can't remember my mother ever striking me or yelling at me. She had a way about it; she had a kind of a reverse psychology, and she would tell me what would happen to me if I didn't do something, but she was always understanding and a very warm human being. I always enjoyed being near her. What? She never struck me with her hands. I didn't say she never beat me with a strap.

She was scrupulously clean. She used to wash the floors every Friday and lay newspapers on the floor in preparation for the Sabbath and, anybody that came up had to walk on the newspapers; otherwise, it meant their life. She used to bathe us in the kitchen in the clothes-washing sink, which was always in the kitchen. Later on, we got fancy and had a bathtub, but this was sometime later. You needed a ladder to get into the bathtub, so high were the legs.

I don't recall whether Mama was strict about bedtime since I always tried to get to bed early. Because, you know, we all slept together, and I wanted the best position. Three of us slept together in one bed. If we had visitors, then we had more people in the bed. But I always tried to get to bed early until I started working at age eleven in the movie theatre. Then I used to get home around ten or eleven o'clock at night. But she was very proud of me working.

Well, my father never gave me a nickel that I can ever remember. He once gave me a check for Christmas, and it bounced. I don't remember that my father ever gave me any gifts. I once asked him for a penny to get a snow cone, you know where they scrape the ice. He said, "If you're hungry, go in the house and eat." Everybody else used to have pennies. I never had a penny of my own until I started working in the movie theatre, and that was in 1921.

Mom always used to ask Carl to go shopping with her. She always said that Carl was the next doctor (and that proved to be the case). Carl always got the first pair of long pants, but I always inherited all of his clothes, and then Phil got them. I never had my own suit until I started working. The first suit I ever had was the one I bought when I started working. If the clothes needed mending, she sewed them, but didn't make them from scratch. We bought them, one suit did three guys. One suit was for Carl and she always figured it—she made it just right for Carl so that by the time it got to me, I grew into it, and then Phil would get it; but we all used to share that way.

What did she spend her time doing? Well, listen, when you're cooking for a family like that, and there were always relatives coming, she was always baking, cooking, and don't forget, we had a coal stove. You just didn't get up and turn something on, you had to stoke the coals, start it, and then she had to get us all off to school. We used to have to come home for lunch, the school was only on the corner, then we used to have to come home for lunch, and then she had to get ready for that big family. There was Agnes, Rae, Solly, Carl, Phil, and me (and the two girls who died); so that was quite a dinner to prepare every night.

Yes, I forgot my dad. He used to come home, but Mom never thought of going out and buying anything. Once in a while we got fancy and bought a loaf of bread but, generally, she used to make it, Cholly every Friday. She used to make a few of them so that would last us all week.

Mom was quite religious, but we didn't have prayers at all our meals. But she used to say the prayers over the candles on Friday, and she wouldn't light a fire on Friday night or Saturday. We used to leave it on or have one of the gentile boys come in and put it on. But Friday and Saturday were very good because we got nice meals on those days.

Well, she never went any place with us. She didn't have time, but she used to, if I came home and she asked me what I did in school and then, if I told her I was good in reading, then she would make me read. But she would make me read to all the neighbors, and they were about as interested as the man in the moon, but they had to stop and listen.

As for my pop: He was about 5'7"; had a little pot-belly and a small mustache. All I can remember about him is that he was like the czar of the Russians. When we were all sitting around the table for dinner, he'd always make a stage entrance, and he'd walk in and he'd slam his fist down on the table and said, "Sold slim shad" that means, "Shut-up, everybody, I'm here." So every time he did that, I used to start laughing. Then he'd hit me a whack in the face; and sometimes he'd knock me down the stairs and beat me with that razor strap. But I have no fond memories of him.

Yes, he beat me more than he did Carl and Phil. He was afraid to touch Carl. I don't know why, but he never thought of touching Carl and he never beat Phil that I can remember, but he sure took it out on me. If he had an argument with Solly, I suffered.

I don't think my mother and father loved each other. I think they got married because it was convenient to do so. Whether their marriage was arranged, I don't know, I wasn't there. But, I think according to the customs, it must surely have been so, but they got married here; they didn't get married in Europe.

I think my mother was beautiful. I loved her. I have very fond memories of my mother, but my father I just didn't care for.

I don't think that my father loved his children. He never spent any time with any of us. I can't ever remember going to a single place with him. The first time I ever went to a theatre away from the Livonia Theatre was with Solly. We went to see the fights at the theatre on Bedford Avenue, the Bedford Theatre. Jack Dempsey and, I think, it was George Carpenter.

Mama's death affected me very strongly; but, you know, at that time it was right after I had started working at the Casa Lopez and I had gotten her permission (because it meant working all night). We had to start at nine o'clock in the evening and finish at four o'clock in the morning, and she made me bring the uniform home. I was a page boy then. She made me put it on, and she was very proud of me. She said she would let me work if I would promise to study hard. I used to go to school from the nightclub, then after school I would sleep. But it was right after that was when she died. I remember I was there when it happened. There was Rae, there was Carl, and there was Solly, and Phil was there too. She started and Solly sent Carl down to his office, which was on Stone and Pitkin. He sent Carl for some kind of medicine, I don't know what it was, but at that time Carl had already started driving so by the time Carl got back, she was gone. That's not the way Carl remembered it!

It's very vivid in my memory because Rae became hysterical, and Carl was the only one that could quiet her down. But, I don't know what medicine it was that Solly sent you for, but you brought it back, but it was too late then. The old man didn't come home until later and then the first thing, he wasn't so concerned about her death, he said to me, "You killed her," just because I was working in the nightclub. Well, I never forgot that, and when I was at the 46th Street theatre later, he moved nearby just to be near me, and I don't know why, but he used to come and see me every few days.

After Mom died, I did not see Papa very often because he moved out. He married that woman, that ugly-looking woman. She was a horror. You know if I was ever going to cast a picture for a horror movie and the door opened, I'd like to see her face in it. She had children, but they did not. He was in his fifties and I remember that even when he died, she wanted to bury him in just a pine box, and Solly just laid it into her and said, "nothing doing."

They were married in Manhattan, and he moved. I never once visited him when he was living with her, but all I remember is that the first time after he got married, he phoned me. I was at the Royal Theatre in the Bronx, and that was right after my son, Stanley, was born, and I told him. I said, "Well, now you're a grandfather." He said, "I didn't know you were married." I said, "Well, I'm married, and I just had a child; you're a grandfather." He said, "Well, is she Jewish?" I said, "No, she's not Jewish." He said, "Why didn't you marry a Jewish girl." I said, "Because I didn't fall in love with one." He never came and saw the baby until the baby was over a year old.

I recall that we were the first of the five private houses on Powell Street to convert to electricity. Prior to that time, we had gas lights and sometimes a kerosene lamp. The gas jets had to be covered with a so-called mantle, which gave out a white light. After the electricity was put in, Mom would not let anyone turn on the lights except Solly because she was afraid that we might electrocute ourselves. Or, at first, she was afraid that the house would blow up. She got over this fear, however. But in those days the sockets were open sockets, and we kids would stick our fingers in them in order to get a shock. We would call the other kids in the neighborhood in and instructed them to put their fingers in so that they, too, could get a shock.

After Solly, Carl was the next favorite in my father's eyes. But that's why Carl saw him a little differently than I did, but I never remember going to the Statue of Liberty with him. I remember going to the Statue of Liberty, but I always thought my mother took us because I don't remember him ever taking me any place. But I never found him very agreeable because to me, he never said anything humorous and he was always hitting or being sarcastic to me.

Around the house, he never lifted a finger. I never saw him do anything but wash his own hands. We boys did whatever we were told to do. In our kind of society, you never just did what you thought you should do. Our mother was the boss, you got all the permission to do things from her. Whatever direction we went, we automatically went to her for permission. When I wanted to work in the movie theatres as a real boy, I went to her and asked if I could take a job. I never went to my father. I do recall friends who had a good relationship with their father, and I thought that was so great, but I did not have that kind of a relationship. To me, Solly was always the father, and he was the guy that we looked to, that I looked to, for anything that you would look to in a father.

Like I said before, I don't remember my father ever taking me any place. I remember very distinctly my mother taking us always some place whenever we went any place—like to relatives.

There's one thing that I think I got a little wrong. When we were hungry, we didn't know we were hungry because when we didn't have any money, she would put a lot of coffee into a soup bowl and then Carl would break bread up into it so we'd have a coffee stew with bread, but it filled us up, and I didn't realize that we were going hungry at that time. My mother just knew that if you ate a lot you would be healthy. She had only one barometer. If you didn't eat much, the food was no good. If you ate a lot, the food was good and that's the way it should be.

I remember one time when she took the three of us to a stand where they made malted milk shakes. They had just started to make them, and the man made the malted milk shake and had to divide it into three glasses, which barely gave us a taste and, that to me, was always the most extreme delicacy of any kind.

There used to be a little guy that would come through the streets and he would sell what he called "hokey-pokey ice cream." This was homemade sherbert that we know of today, but there was also the guy that had the pushcart. He would have a cake of ice on the pushcart, then he would have a scraper and would scrape it full of ice, and then he would put all kinds of beautiful colored syrups on the ice, but I never had any money to get any because he would charge you three cents, give cents for two cones. And, today I buy strawberry soda at home because the color always fascinates me. I eat by color. If I see a nice colored cold creme, I'll eat it!

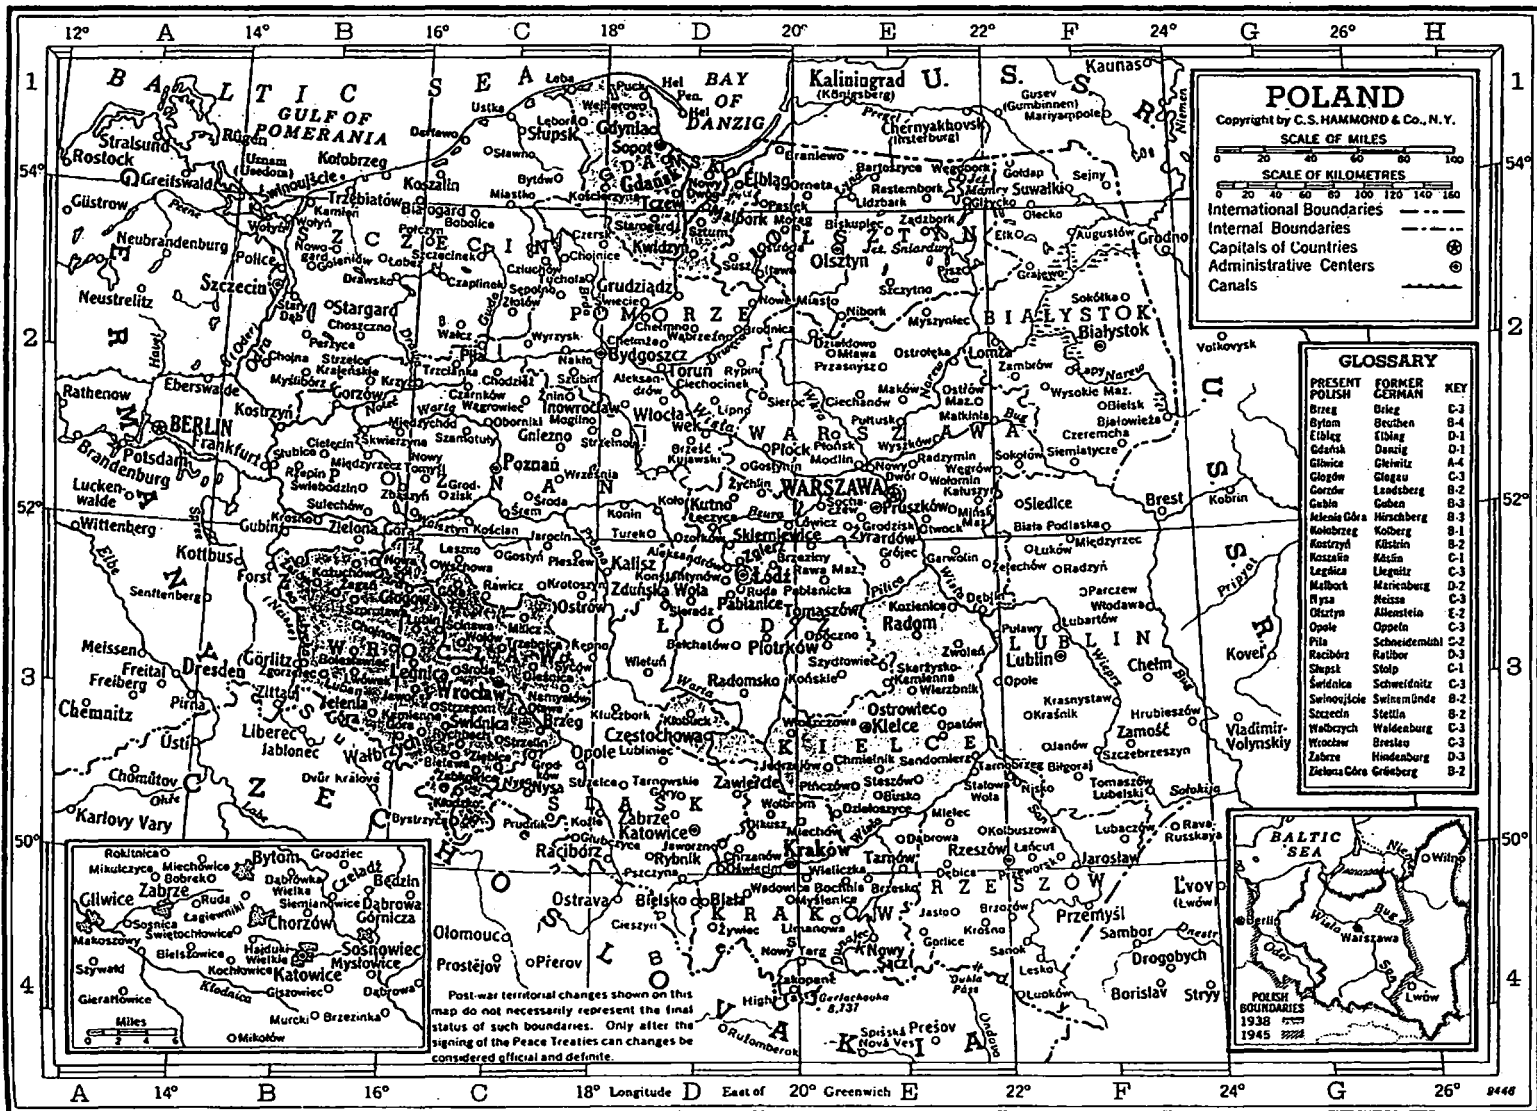

Mama was the intermediary of the whole family. If Papa was on the outs with his father, which he was regularly, and then for two or three years they wouldn't talk, but everything was transmitted to the two of them by my mother. My grandfather would talk to my mother, and tell her to tell my father. My father would tell my mother what to tell his father to do, but the whole family was that way.

I remember my father's mother and father, but I only remember my grandmother on my mother's side. As a matter of fact, I remember the day she died, I was locked in the bedroom with her. I was a young kid and from that day to now, I'm afraid to look at a dead body. I don't know how the door happened to get shut, but I couldn't get the door open.

My grandfather on my father's side and my grandmother on my father's side were not much better than my father. They were nice; however, I never felt about them as I do about my grandchildren, for example, fell about me. They like to see grandpa. I used to go to their house, and they never even gave us a piece of candy. But my mother's mother, well, she used to be nice. She used to give us rides in the pushcarts. They had a pushcart stable in the back, but she used to give us rides in them, but they were different.

I don't have any real recollection of that, but I do remember that if I knew my father was home and I came in a few minutes late, I would sit out on the street until maybe nine, ten o'clock because I was afraid to go in because I knew I was in for a beating. Boy, he would beat me unmercifully. I tried to run out, and he'd catch me on the stairs. He used to have me bleeding. I would hide under the bed, and he would move the bed away and catch me, but I never got away with it. I never got away with anything. I never did anything to get away with, but evidently he thought that I did.

THE SHTETL GAZETTEER

LOMZA & SUWALKI GUBERNIAS

From 1795 through the period of World War I, there was a constant struggle in Poland for independence. Lomza and Suwalki Gubernias, later so close to both the Prussian and Russian borders, figured prominently in the ever-changing borders.

When Napoleon conquered the lands, he instituted Civil Registration, which even continued after his defeat at Waterloo in 1815. It was this registration that has made genealogical research so rewarding in Poland: In Polish until 1867, when Russian was used.

After the partition of Poland in 1795, especially after the Congress of Vienna of the then great powers—Russia, Germany, and Austria—part of Poland became known as Russian Poland. In 1815 it became an autonomous province of Russia, more specifically, as Congress Poland, or the Kingdom of Poland.

The czarist authorities in 1866 divided the Augustow province into two separate administrative entities—Lomza gubernia and Suwalki gubernia. Szczuczyn, in Lomza gubernia, became the administrative and financial center of the new Szczuczyn district. Grajewo, too, was also in Lomza as were Kolno, Zambrow, Gac, Rajgrad, Augustow, and Lomza. Filipow and Augustow were in Suwalki gubernia.

Both gubernias in northeastern Poland figured in the lives of ancestors. They were in the beautiful lake district with its forests and bodies of water.

At the end of the nineteenth century, when the persecution of the Jews under the Czarist Regime became greater day by day with induction into the Czarist Army, the only hope remaining was emigration to America—and that became the primary cause for many of the emigrants.

AUGUSTOW 53.51N - 22.59E

In the province of Bialystok on a canal connecting the Vistula with the Niemen, Augustow was founded in 1557 by Sigismund II. It was a typical small town, laid out in a regular manner with a market-place. It carried on a large trade in cattle and horses, manufacture of linen and huckaback, and was a center for the transport of timber from the Augustow forest. Here, too, was the last home of Rabbi Yosele Shapiro, whose descendants figure significantly among many of the immigrants to America.

In 1800 Augustow had a total population of 1,987 of whom 462 were Jews (23%). By 1897 there were 12,743 total population with 3,637 (29%), who were Jews.

GRAJEWO 53.39N - 22.27E

Grajewo, of Lomza district, is located on the Lenk River, 2.6 miles from the East Prussian town of Prostkin, former site of the German border. It grew over a period of several hundred years from a small village, with dirt roads and unpaved streets, into a community of ten thousand people, the majority of whom were Jews.

Its location as a border town at the southern edge of East Prussia was an important factor in its economic and cultural life. In 1795 the Kingdom of Poland was partitioned for the third time and Grajewo became part of Czarist Russia. Both a main highway and a railroad passed through the town. Indeed until the construction in 1800 of the Kaunas-to-Warsaw Royal Post Road, Grajewo was less important than Szczuczyn and Rajgrad. Provisions such as oil, salt, etc. were usually carried over the dirt road to Bagushe or Szczuczyn. The volume of commercial traffic between Russia and Prussia going through Grajewo was considerable and brought prosperity to its inhabitants.

According to the 1765 census, there were 83 Jews aged over one year (17 families), of whom six families resided in their own houses and eleven in leased dwellings; 336 Jews were living in 38 villages in the vicinity. They leased taverns or were occupied as small traders or artisans such as tailors and tinsmiths.

In the great uprising of the Poles in the struggle for Polish liberation in 1831, a Polish resistance army (in which Jews participated) was concentrated around the huge forests on the road from Grajewo to Rajgrad under the leadership of the Polish patriot Dombrowski.

Jewish administrative affairs had long been directed by the Jewish kehila. Every year around Passover, representatives who had been chosen from each synagogue or prayer room would assemble for the purpose of selecting the kehila's administrators. Generally, only those who owned businesses or property were eligible to select the delegates, so that craftsmen or laborers who owned no property were not eligible to take part in the election of the delegates.

In the previous century there already existed in Grajewo several tanneries that were producing fine leather. As early as 1840 the family of Meir Fishbein, Orushe's son-in-law, managed tanneries which employed many workers. In the 1870s Meir Orushes was selling leather in Danzig. Whether Jacob Krellenstein, who was a tanner, belonged to this establishment remains to be seen. In addition to trade, the Jews in Grajewo became a part of the general economy of the vicinity. Jewish craftsmen worked and served the village as well as the city. Jewish smiths made plowshares, wagons, harrows, and scythes, and shod horses; shoemaking, tailoring, carpentry, hat making, and watchmaking were thoroughly Jewish occupations in Grajewo. It was the same for miller, barbers, and teamsters. The last served as carriers. Thus, Grajewo was a very constructive and productive community.

Until 1862 Grajewo was included in the towns of the Russian-German border zone, where Jewish residence was subjected to various restrictions. In the nineteenth century many Jews in Grajewo exported agricultural produce to Eastern Prussia. The community numbered 197 (39% of the total population) in 1808, 727 (57%) in 1827, 1,457 (76%) and 551 Poles in 1856. In 1897 of 7,651, 4,336 (57%) were Jews.

There were anti-Jewish outbreaks in 1933. In November 1942 most of the Jews in Grajewo were sent to the death camp of Treblinka.

FILIPOW 54.18N - 22.62E

The town of Filipow was laid out by King Sigmund August's inspectors and foresters in the vicinity of the Szembelewo and Dowspuda towns, about the years 1562-1568. Both of the older Dowspuda and Szembelewo towns have disappeared.

Filipow was granted Magdeburg rights in 1570 by Sigmund August, allowing it the right of municipal self-government. The following year the king established the local parish church, which was built in its present location in 1742 and rebuilt in brick in 1838. Filipow received a coat of arms with the likeness of a crayfish and the right to have three fairs per year, and a weekly market. Its merchants and townspeople were exempt from paying land taxes and market fees. The trapezoidal-shaped market square became the center of the town. The Synagogue, Bies Medresh (religious study hall), and the Rabbi's house were located on the south side of the square. It was a custom in many towns of Europe to build a rabbi's residence alongside the synagogue. There was also a shochet (ritual slaughterer).

Since Filipow in Suwalki gubernia was so close to Koenigsburg, many of the citizens traveled for medicinal purposes to that city, which was well-known for its doctors and hospitals. Filipow was only two miles from the Prussian border.

The earliest mention of a Jewish community in Filipow was in 1765, at which time there lived 274 Jews. In 1800, there were 802 total inhabitants, of whom 201 (25%) were Jews. In 1827 Filipow had 323 houses and a total of 2,351 inhabitants. In 1861 there were 291 houses and 2,551 inhabitants, including 812 Jews (32%). By 1897 the Jewish community had 548 (27%) of 2,024 inhabitants.

KOLNO 53.25N - 21.56E

Since the name Kolno can be found in several locations in Poland, the shtetl which is the subject of this discussion was located in Lomza Gubernia. Situated only a few miles from the old German (Prussian) border, it was greatly influenced by German culture.

Kolno was a small, rural shtetl with no manufacturing. The general population were primarily farmers or agricultural workers. The Jewish population were primarily merchants, traders, and small-scale businessmen, as well as an inn keeper. Indeed, in 1825 Israel Wincewicz was an inn keeper. Another specific Kolno export-trade—fresh mushrooms from the surrounding forests. Because of its proximity to the border, Kolno was also known for horse trading and smuggling. The Kolno Jewish horse-traders were in a specific business category, a Kolno specialty. The proximity of the German and East Prussian frontiers and the comparatively good communication from them to Denmark, Belgium, Holland, France and Switzerland, attracted horse dealers, interested in purchasing the powerful Polish working-horses for farming or mining purposes. The fish-trade was another source of income, closely linked with the frontier's proximity. This was a difficult trade, as there were no refrigeration facilities and ice for summer had to be accumulated in winter. The frozen river-water would be cut up into ice-blocks, stored in deep cellars and covered up with straw, so as to last all summer.

The "shul" (the main synagogue) was situated on the main street of the northern section, called the Vincener highway, leading to the German border; around the corner were the Beth Hamidrash (the study-house), the Rabbi's residence, the Beth Din (the family court-house) and various "shtiblech" (prayer-houses).

Kolno was one of the several points where travel-agents used to arrange border-crossings (sometimes legal; more often not) for the thousands of emigrants from all parts of Poland and Russia who went into Germany. They then sent them hurriedly on their way to the great ports of Bremen, Antwerp, and Rotterdam, usually for America.

Jews represented less than 10% of the population until the late 1800s and grew to 59% in 1897, where of 4,891, 2,863 were Jews.

LOMZA 53.11N - 22.05E

One can make a reasonable assumption that Jewish settlement in Lomza and its environs began with the general wanderings of Jews from the German lands into Poland. That occurred in the 10th and 11th centuries, especially during the time of the Crusades. The Lomza area, Mazowie, being close to the border of the German lands, also fell under these fiats. Yet the status of the Jews in Poland was better than in the Teutonic states in the 14th and 15th centuries. King Wladimir Lokietek (1306-1333) and King Casimir the Great (1333-1370) bestowed privileges on the Jews.

Although Lomza was mentioned in the statue books of the 15th century, it is virtually certain that the town was founded much earlier on the spot where the village Stara Lomza (Old Lomza) is now located. In the 12th century a new settlement started near Old Lomza; namely, Nova Lomza (New Lomza). It was located in the middle of the forest, animals, deer, and so on, near the river Narev, which has the shape of a Latin S, Krzywe Kolo (Crooked Wheel).

After the renewal of the Jewish settlement in Lomza around 1812-1822, the old cemetery was opened. Later, the first study house was built on Senatorska Street on the ruins of the second palace. It was known as The Great Study House. In time, the Jews bought the entire tract and built on it most of their communal buildings, such as the Talmud Torah, the Sabbath Shelter, the Hospital, the Slaughter House, the Poor House, and the Yeshiva.

The princes of Mazowie would receive substantial payment from Jewish trading, which is why they protected the Jews from the Poles, their rivals. However, for many years (1595 through late 1700s) there were no Jews in Lomza. In 1797 the Prussians took Lomza and ruled there for eleven years. Szcuczyn was the principal town and Lomza was considered a village. In 1807 after Napoleon took Prussia, which had ruled Poland until that time, the so-called Polish Principality was created, consisting of six departments (provinces), where the Napoleonic Code was followed.

Officially, the rights of Jews were declared equal to the rights of Poles. Jews actually appeared in the town, but Polish leaders, through intercessors, prevailed on the king to allow at least a ten-year extension of the old Lomza statute against the Jews. In 1815, in the time of Alexander I of Russia, there began a new course in the political life of Poland. Clear laws concerning the improvement of the status of the Jews had not yet been promulgated, but the Jews did not wait. They opened shops for manufactures, food, dishes, etc. Trade with the peasants continued without interference. In 1822 the decree was passed that all Lomza Jews had to move into the Rybaki. Soon the Jews were allowed to spread out. During the various uprisings between 1830 and 1862 the Poles prevented the participation of the Jews in rebel legions, so the Jews supported them with money, food, shoes, and clothing; however, the 1863 Insurrection against the Russians contained many armed Jews, who received death sentences.

Lomza in 1897 of 26,093, 9,214 (35%) were Jews.

RAJGROD 53.44N - 22.42E

The village of Rajgrad was situated on both sides of the toll gate and bridge over the Jegrznia River. The river was, at times, the border between Poland and Prussian Germany, depending on the outcome of the latest war. Rivers and lakes were common features of the area, providing a livelihood for the many fishermen who seined and hooked the pike and carp.

The first building was the inn and a tavern. Like most of the entrepreneurs of Rajgrad, these facilities were leased from the local poret, the Polish nobleman who owned the land and the buildings. Towns and villages had been established by charters from the Polish kings and noblemen by the middle of the 1600s. This enabled the poret to lease such assets as estates, forests, fields, stores, taverns, inns, distilleries, and dairy processing to the leaseholding rendars, mostly Jews who had fled oppression and poverty in Germany and other European countries. If the jobs were given to the Gentile serfs, the noblemen would have had no one to work the fields.

The supervisory role given to the Jews had another effect. It was their task to collect the taxes from the peasants, deflecting criticism from the noblemen and inducing hatred by the serfs against their Jewish managers. Occasionally when a poret became too heavily indebted to his rendars, he would initiate a local pogrom designed to eradicate both the debt and the Jewish creditors.

Like Jews everywhere, the People of the Book who inhabited the tiny Polish shtetl of Rajgrad were guided by the words of God. In the Jewish world a plethora of religious books was constantly being written to interpret the Law.

The rabbis in their alpaca jackets and black velvet hats dispensed the Law, threatening sinners with the hellish doom of Gehenna. But if the recipients of their decisions were unhappy about the results, they could appeal to other rabbis. The fact that their religion had no central authority made it possible for the Jews to exist adroitly in the Diaspora, through all the many bitter persecutions.

The village of Rajgrad was mentioned by the 12th century. In Lomza gubernia Rajgrad had a Jewish population in 1897 of 54%, 1,625 of 3,005.

SCZCZUCZYN 53.34N - 22.18E

The vicinity of Szczuczyn originally had been administered within the province (voivodship) of Mazowia, land of Wosz, in the county (powiat) Wasosz. The earliest mention of Szczuczyn dates from the fifteenth century, the name being derived from that of the Szczukz family. The town developed under its owner, and economic development of the town expanded under the protection of its powerful owner, at the expense of the county seat Wasosz. Eventually Szczuczyn became the new county seat, and remained so until the middle of the nineteenth century. Construction of the town began in 1689 by Stanislaw Antoni Szczuka in the location of the existing village. The wet land in that locality required extensive drainage works, which converted the overflow from the Vistula River into a system of moats to defend the future town.

The first design, by the French architect de Flaniers, was a pentagonal town plan with a large market place at the center. Shop stalls and the town hall were built at the center of the market place. Further north, toward the river Wissa, de Flaniers also designed a defensive mansion for Szczuka, which was later redesigned into a residential palace with gardens. A group of ecclesiastical buildings designed by Italian architects was constructed on the southern edge of the town near the end of the seventeenth century, with the church at its center between the college and the monastery. The town was then further extended to the north, where the area called "New Town" with its own market-place developed toward the end of the eighteenth century.

Originally, the population was predominantly Polish, earning their living through commerce and agriculture. From the nineteenth century on Jews immigrated into the town (in the area known as the "New Town"), engaging mainly in the cattle trade. The railroad built in the middle of the nineteenth century bypassed the town, causing a gradual economic decline, and the county seat was transferred to the town of Grajewo, which had a railroad station. During the nineteenth century the town changed owners frequently. In the New Town, on the opposite bank of the brook Ksiezanka, the Old Post Office, built at the beginning of the nineteenth century, survived in its original form and is still used for this purpose.

In Yiddish, the town was known as Stuchin. Home to large military barracks, Szczuczyn prospered whether under Polish, German, or Russian rule.

While the Prussian Inventory of 1799-1800 showed that the Jews comprised only about 11% of Szczuczyn's inhabitants in that year, their representation had risen to 59% in just 20 years, according to figures Grochowska gives for the year 1820: 2,500 inhabitants, including 697 Christians, 1,479 Jews, and 324 persons of other belief. There were then 236 houses, including 16 made of brick. The Jewish population in this town was more than three times that of the Christian population. In 1897, of 5,756, 3,336 (58% were Jews).

The 1810-1811 Inventory shows that the buildings were mostly wooden, and among the owners of the brick buildings a significant percentage were Jews. Beyond the usual crafts, such as shoemakers, tailors, smiths, bakers, etc., there was a wide range of specialities, including a soap manufacturer, a book-binder, hat makers, beer makers, a steam-bath building, dye makers, goldsmiths, and others. Likewise, commerce in the town, besides the petty transmen (stall-keepers) included some of the elite professions, such as dealers in horned cattle and wholesale businesses.

Upon the creation of the Kingdom of Poland in 1815, the former Lomza department was incorporated into the new Augustow province, the capitol of which was Suwalki. The town of Szczuczyn was described by the new province administration authorities, in archival documents. After the town of Augustow, Szczuczyn was the nicest and most business-like, which was due to its proximity to Prussia, and nearness to Warsaw. There were many rich traders, especially Jews.

Before 1939 there were lumber mills, tanneries, flour mills, manufacturing of hats, uniforms, boots, shoes, and breweries, and many retail business. About 90 percent of those were Jewish owned. During World War II the three synagogues built in the New Town in the nineteenth century were completely destroyed.

STAWISKI 53.53N - 22.09E

Stawiski is a settlement, including a town and surrounding land that is on the Bierbza River, a tributary of the Narew. It is situated on hills on the route from Lomza to Szczuczyn. The distance between it and Kolno, the regional city is 24 wirwost. (A wirwost is slightly more than a kilometer.) The distance from Stawiski to Lomza is 21 wirwost, and to Warsaw, 168 wirwost. Its institutions included a district church, 2 synagogues, a public school, cheders, a district courthouse, a town council and a post office. It contained 181 houses, and had a population of 4,140 people (1,930 men and 2,210 women). It covered an area of 3,530 morag. (A morag is approximately 5 dunam.) In the surrounding lands, there was a liquor distillery, flourmills, and a brick kiln. Some of its residents worked in tanning. In an earlier time, Stawiski had factories for cloth, hats, and dyes. Stawiski developed due to its location. It was situated along a trade route, which led from Prussia to Russia. It also served as a commercial center between Lomza and Szczuczyn.

There are no definitive facts about the time frame of the founding of Stawiski. In the 8th century, the lands were in the possession of the noblemen of the Karmkowski family, and later in the possession of the noblemen of the Kiszlaniczki family. According to Karel Czirhoffer in Names of Settlements in Northern Mazowia which was published in 1957, Stawiski was recognized as an urban settlement in 1426. In 1697, Zamowski, the owner of the estate, built the Franciscan monastery and the Miec church. Later, a church was built out of bricks, and between the years 1790-1818, the large church which still exists today was built.

Around 1813, all of the houses of the town burnt down. The portion of the church that survived the fire was attached to the Porita church. In 1886, the lands of Stawiski included the estates of Smolnik and Sokolocha, which had an area of 3,048 morag, including wheat fields, pastureland, forests, and irrigated land.

In the latter years, the population of Stawiski reached 8,163 people, and covered an area of 19,182 morag. It had schools, liquor stills, 2 brick kilns, 5 flourmills, and an oil-press. Jewish children went to a Jewish school and were taught by Jewish teachers. The community of Stawiski included the town as an urban center, 14 estates, and 13 villages.

The oldest record of Jewish presence in Stawiski goes back to 1820. In that year a local postman wrote about the town: Stawiski town is a property of a landlord and is located on the main trade road leading to Saint Petersburg. In the best years of trading it became quite known because a lot of merchants lived there. The population of Stawiski was 917 inhabitants, among them 328 were Christians and 589 were Jews (64%).

Out of 2,570 people that lived in Stawiski in 1857 2,243 were Jews (87%). Stawiski as well as the nearby Szczuczyn town was a typical shtetl with Jewish tradesmen, moneylenders, and craftsmen. All houses around the square were in the hands of Jewish families. The ground floors were occupied by little shops and inns. One local bakery belonged to a Jew. Jews were also owners of a brewery and factories producing clothing and hats.

One resident remembers Stawiski as "a wide place in the road." The highway formed one side of the town square. A large cathedral dominated one side and a block of dreary shops formed another. In 1897 of 3,339 inhabitants, there were 2,554 (76%) of Jews.

ZAMBROW 53.00N - 22.15E

Jews settled in Zambrow as early as the seventeenth century. The community established a synagogue, cemetery, and ritual bath by the eighteenth century. The census of Jews in the Polish Kingdom of 1765 gave the number of Jews in the Kehillah of Zambrow as 197. Conceivably, more than 150 Jews were in the town of Zambrow toward the end of the eighteenth century.

The first deceased Jews from Zambrow were interred in the Jablonka Jewish cemetery. A larger influx of Jews into Zambrow took place at the start of the nineteenth century. The present extant cemetery was opened in the 1830s. Located on Lomzynska Street, and covering a large area of 1,240 hectares, it is now partially surrounded by a wire fence. The memorial stones in their original versions were painted in yellow, red, gold, and black colors.

The first wooden synagogue that we know of in Zambrow was presumably built at the end of the eighteenth century; however, it did not last beyond the end of the nineteenth century. In 1895 it was dismantled and replaced by the large stone synagogue; which was destroyed in World War II.

By 1897, according to the Russian Jewish Encyclopedia, there were 3,463 Jews (32%) in Zambrow.

TUCHMAN ROOTS

Where the Tuchman family was located before its appearance in Zambrow is left for future genealogists. As indicated previously, however, Sarah Chanca Tuchman was born a twin 13 May 1859 in Wisniewo, but the birth was registered in nearby Zambrow. Since her father was listed as "Mortek, son of Mortka" (both derivatives of "Mordecai"), there had been much discussion about an Ashkenazic son being named for his father. It was customary for such Jewish families to name their children for deceased relatives.

As it turned out Mordecai, born about 1832 after the death of his father, was therefore named for his deceased father Mordecai. Interestingly, the widow, Leah, married her husband's cousin Szumo Herzsl Tuchman, son of Wolf, after Mortdecai's death. This, too, was customary for a widow to remarry a close relative of her husband's. Szumo in turn died 4 March 1847 while Leah was pregnant with their third daughter since only the first two daughters were named in his death certificate.

Leah's death record shows that she died 4 April 1870 in Zambrow, Lomza Gubernia, Polish Russia, and named her children as follows:

Mortko, son of Mortko

Cywa Ryfka, daughter of Szumo

Szenja Rochla, daughter of Szumo

Syma, daughter of Szumo

Such a record shows that her children had two different fathers.

Zambrov

No. 5 In the city of Zambrov on the twenty-third of March/fourth of April, one thousand eight hundred and seventy at 3:00 p. m., there appeared Moshko Tenenbaum, aged 70, and Shimon Rozhan, aged 50, both scholars and residents of the city of Zambrov. They declared that today at midnight, Leah [daughter of Ephraim] Shamova Tuhman, aged 66, died. She is survived by her son Morko [son of Morko] and three daughters, Tziva Shamovna, Rokhel, and Sima in the city of Zambrov. She did not leave over any property. This certifies the passing of Leah Froimovna Shamova Tuhman. This certificate was read aloud in the presence of the aforementioned, and signed by them.

Notes for Ike PEARLMAN

His given name was Ichiel, not Isaac. A younger brother was named Isaac. Although usually employed, Ike was a compulsive gambler. He indulged his children when winning; but the family suffered during his periods of losses.

Notes for Ida Martha KRELLENSTEIN

Ida used to say to her neice Fannie, "I didn't invite you to my wedding, but you were so good you came anyway." As indicated, the marriage took place at the bedside of the bride's mother-in-law, who had just given birth to Fannie.

THE DESCENDANTS OF RABBI JOSEPH

Shortly after becoming interested in genealogical pursuits, I was privileged to meet with three of the surviving members of this once-active organization known as The Descendants of Rabbi Yosele Shapiro: Solomon J. Weinstein, the President, born 24 October 1880 in Suchowalia, Grodno Gubernia, Russia; Israel Herman "Alter" Levin, M. D., born 1 January 1880 in Grajewo, Lomza Gubernia, Polish Russia; and Isidor Levin, born 3 January 1889, also in Grajewo. They acquainted me with many of the oral traditions and reminiscences carried forward by the descendants who retained close ties with their European relatives after immigrating to the United States.

The progenitor, Rabbi Yosele (or Joseph) Shapiro, born before 1755, was "extremely orthodox," as were many Jews in Russia. In 1775 he was a "head rabbi" at Bialystock—whether the town or district, I do not know. However, by 1800 he was located with his family in Augustow, Poland, where he was "Rosh Beth Din"; that is, "Chief Justice." He was the individual mentioned in Chester G. Cohen's Shtetl Finder as having died in Augustow in 1848.

Of particular genealogical interest is the fact that Rabbi Joseph had two daughters and at least seven—some say ten—sons. The girls were Frume Feigel and Blume; and the sons were Joshua, Nissel, Abraham Itzak, Eliahu, Isser, Benjamin, Heschel, Mottel, and perhaps Boruch and David. All children had large families, and all the sons became rabbis and established themselves in various communities throughout northeastern Poland and across the borders into Germany and Russia.

Thus, I began to abstract records from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, which contained numerous birth, marriage, and death registers from many of the towns in which I was interested. While at the time missing the Civil Registry Office of Augustow, there were excellent entries from Grajewo and Szczuczyn (Stuchin in Yiddish), where many vital events took place: Shapiro (Szapiero & Sapir in Polish records) and Lewy (Levy, Levin, Levine in English). The major lineages followed were those of Rabbi Joshua (Osieja in Polish and Schia as a nickname), who married 1) Malki Zelda Wincewicz and 2) Chaje Osiejowa. The two daughters of Rabbi Yosele: Frume Feigel, who married Elias Suchowolsky, and Bluma, who married Gedalia Chimilewsky (Zhmielwski, the Yiddish equivalent) were also followed.

It might have been particularly difficult to find record of the Chimilewsky family had Dr. I. H. Levin not informed me that the family name had been changed. He pointed out that when the family visited their German relatives on their way to New Orleans, they were told that they shouldn't enter the United States with such a Polish-sounding name, so they adopted the approximate German equivalent in use by their cousins: "Oppenheim" or "open house"; thus, hospitable.

The popularity of German names during the mid-nineteenth century was apparent with other descendants of Rabbi Yosele. Hyam Wolfe Shapiro became Henry Wolf Silverstein, and several of his children became the more American, "Stone." His brother, Rabbi Boruch Aaron Shapiro reputedly became Benjamin Silverstein; then Rabbi Benjamin Stone. Since it is not always possible to know exactly when a name-change took place, one must use all the names to follow the movement of an individual.

Not to be forgotten was the frequency with which a given name would be changed after the family found itself in the United States—often with an English equivalent. To name just a few of the others: Chaya became Ida, Bryna or Brindel became Bertha, Bernice, or Betty, Shaina became Jenny, Zelda became Celia, Basha became Bessie, Nechama became Natalie, Itke became Etta or Ethel, Fruma Feigel became Freida or Fanny. Among the men: Chaim or Hyman became Herman, Moshe became Morris, Leib became Louis, Gedaliah became Glenn, Hershal became Harry, Mordechi or Menachem Mendal became Max, Eliahu became Alan or Alexander, Shaike became Samuel, Fishel or Fivel became Phillip, Akiva or Kivi became Carl, Jehuda became Julius, Ruwen became Robert, Pesach became Percival.

It is apparent from the names listed on the letterhead of The Descendants of Rabbi Yosele Shapiro as late as 1940 that additional work still needs to be done on lineages from other children of Rabbi Joseph.

ALEXANDER SHAPIRO

By the will of the Almighty, our beloved cousin, the founder of the Society, has departed this world for the great beyond.

His sudden and untimely death has crushed our spirits and deeply wounded our hearts. Many of us stood before his bier with tears streaming down our faces and with bowed heads bade him goodbye.

Physically, our Cousin Alex is no longer with us, but his spirit, his great loving personality is still among us and will forever remain our inspiration and our guide.

Among the many lofty ideals that guided Cousin Alex throughout his life was the idea of keeping the Descendants of Rabbi Yosele together. With this in mind, let us consecrate ourselves to that same ideal, to perpetuate the existence of our Family Circle and strengthen the bonds of friendship which have been weakened by his physical absence.

Therefore, I call upon you to be present at the Memorial Meeting which our Society has arranged in honor of Cousin ALEX SHAPIRO, on SUNDAY, DECEMBER 8th, 1940, at 3 P. M., at the GREYSTONE HOTEL, 91st Street & Broadway, Room 225.

S. J. WEINSTEIN, President.

Notes for Samuel Benedict OPPENHEIM

About 1878 he travelled to the United States; then returned to Polish Russia; then in 1894 immigrated to the United States. The name Chimilevsky had been changed to Oppenheim by the German branch of the family, who recommended that he do so.
 Helped by New York relatives. Lived in both New York and Louisiana.

Notes for Shana Itke FISHBEIN

She believed that she could better help husband financially in Poland where she was known. They had business which she sold later.
 She, too, went to the United States after husband but also returned to Poland before finally immigrating permanently to the United States in 1896.

AN UNEXPECTED DISCOVERY

I had heard from family sources that Rabbi Joshua Shapiro (Osieja Szapiera) and his first wife had at least two daughters born before or about 1830, reputedly in Szczuczyn. Rachel, the eldest, married Akiva Levy; and, as previously described, it is through them that my husband traces descent and Akiva for whom my husband was named. (Although known officially as Carl, to the day he died, he was called Kivi by his family and childhood friends; and in the Polish records, Akiva was usually shown as Kiwe.)

Let's return to the subject of Rachel Shapiro's parents before I drift too far astray. Because of the close association of the Descendants of Rabbi Yosele—name of that turn-of-the-century organization formed by immigrant descendants in the United States—it was known that Rabbi Joshua Shapiro was a son of Rabbi Joseph. But who were the wives?

In spite of an extensive search through the records in Szczuczyn, where I did find record of the births of Rachel's younger half-siblings, I could not find anything about her birth or that of her full sister. Her death record was there with Szczuczyn given as birthplace. Of course, the document mentioned name of her husband and several other documents identified her father; but no mention of her mother could be found. So I reluctantly concluded that I might never learn the identity of Rabbi Joshua's first wife.

Because I like to have as complete a record as possible for each ancestral family, however, I continued to abstract records for every Shapiro (Szapiera and Sapir) I found in northeastern Poland during the early nineteenth century and, of course, records for other family surnames as well.

To aid in my research, I subscribed to Landsmen, a quarterly devoted to the gubernias of Lomza and Suwalki. For months I found only bits and pieces of pertinent data in the publication, but I persisted—even searching through records of towns that I thought had absolutely no connection with the family.

You guessed it! The method paid off although I often thought to myself: Why am I perusing the records of this town?

So it was with the village of Kolno! Imagine my surprise when I saw the birth for Rochla Szapiera 14 February 1825 right there in Kolno—not in Szczuczyn where it was to be expected. Furthermore, it was an entry replete with details about her mother and father and forebears.

It was apparent that Rachel's mother (now discovered to have been the former Malka Zelda Wincewicz) had gone to her parents' home in Kolno to give birth while her husband attended rabbinical school in Makow, district of Poltusk, province of Plock.

Not only did I learn the identity of Rachel's mother, Malka Zelda; but the other Kolno records contained the names of Rachel's grandparents, Israel Szymkawicz Wincewicz and Fradla Mortkowna Wincewicz, as well as of several aunts and uncles.

(See the birth record for Rochla Szapiera in Kolno with translation.)

TRANSLITERATION

No. 9

Grajewo The following took place in the settlement of Grajewo on twelfth/twenty-fourth of May one thousand eight hundred seventy-one. At nine o'clock in the morning there appeared before me Yankel Shtain, rabbi of the settlement of Grajewo, fifty-six years of age, in the presence of witnesses Aron Malachowsky, schoolman, fifty-six years of age, and Shimka Orlinsky, alderman, thirty-five years of age, Jews, residing in Grajewo, and stated that at seven o'clock in the evening on the previous day a religious ceremony of marriage was performed before him between the Jews Ovsiey Josel (two first names) [son of Kiva] Levi, unmarried wage worker, residing in the town of Szczuczyn, twenty-three years of age, son of Kiva [son of Mosko] and Rachel Levi, legal spouses, working people, residing in the town of Szczuczyn, and Zelda Leah (two first names) [daughter of Abram-Yankel] Malachowska, maiden, seventeen years of age, daughter of Yankel Abram and Liba, nee Ovsieyevna, Malachowsky, legal spouses, tailors, residing in Grajewo, living with parents. This marriage was preceded by proclamation, banns published three times in the Szczuczyn and Grajewo temples at the time of the worship service on the Saturday sabbath on third/fifteenth, tenth/twenty-second, and seventeenth/twenty-ninth of April in the current year. The permission of the parents of the newlyweds, present before me at the preparation of the marriage record, was declared verbally. The newlyweds stated that a marriage agreement had not been concluded between them. This record was signed after being read over by us, the rabbi, and the witnesses. The other people named in this record have stated that all of them are literate.
