1. This material was sent to Alan D. Mark, a Gen D mark 3/95
2. This material was sent to Robert B. Martin 1/95 (sent FGR Mark - check looking at correspondence file if needed)
3. Additional material 8/196 by Gen D mark

4. On 7/98 & borrowed from WETS team, a Dept. Psychological Services Delaware Co. (1995). The writer says, "I would have been that near the primary subject. I do not see much more on bank, & check against my 20 month (any) Delaware Co. FGR. Also for names and the results are tabulated as 7/98 on them. I had looked through other work for any names and found one name.

The first business in the village of Andes and the surrounding country. It is now one of the best farmers in Glenshire Hollow, having a fine farm of two hundred acres.
 FREDERICK DREYER, chimney maker, was born in Germany. He came to New York City in 1837 and to Andes in 1853. He was married in 1856 to Kate, daughter of Edmund Dreyers, of Andes.
 JAMES H. DICKER was born in Middletown in 1817. He was a farmer and drover until 1859, when he established a grocery at Shavertown, where he is now engaged. He was married to Frances Twiss, of Colchester, in 1856.
 W. D. DEAN was born at Boyton in 1825. His early days were spent on a farm usually teaching school during the winter season. In 1850 he began his mercantile career in Boyton. He was in the boot and shoe business in New York City several years, and in 1851 he opened a general store in Andes, where he is now engaged.
 THOMAS EDWARDS, farmer, was born in Ireland in 1813, and came to Dela-who was born in Scotland in 1837. She was the widow of John Clendenen, a highly respected citizen, who was born in 1783 and died in 1861, leaving four sons. The farm was settled by Killips, a German squatter, who made the first clearing in this vicinity. The first lease was taken by Gilbert Bradley.

 ELLI FETTON, Jr., was born in England in 1816. He came to New York City with a child. He came to Andes in 1838, and worked as a practical tinner until 1848, when he opened a hardware store. He was married in 1840

HISTORY OF DELAWARE

ARKVILLE

A mile above Margaretville, on the Bush kill, is one of the oldest business points. Soon after the return of the settlers at the close of the Revolution occurred what was known as the "pumpkin freshet." Coming in the fall of the year, before the crops had been gathered, the pumpkins floated off the fields until the river was covered by them.

The water on this occasion rose in the night so as to inundate the flats and almost submerge the sleeping Dutchmen. The first alarm to one family came from an altercation between the children sleeping in the old-fashioned trundle-bed. When the venerable sire jumped in rage from his bed to settle the fuss, he found that neither of the boys could be blamed for the discomfiture, for the water had risen so that he stood on his own floor in water knee deep. The elevated position of the block tavern at the time of this flood afterward suggested the name of Arkville.

Here Simeon Von Woggoner kept the first tavern in Middletown, in a double block-house on the site of the elegant residence of Mr. Longyear. The entrance was surmounted by the largest pair of antlers that had ever been known.

The landlord also built the first grist-mill in this part of the town, and one of the first in the county. The mill property was afterward owned by Jonathan Hasbrook, who sold it to Colonel Noah Dimmick in 1826. Mr. Dimmick added much to the business of the place and erected the present mills.

During his time it was the principal business center in the town, and militia training and town meetings were held here.

The first store here was kept by one Newkirk, who was succeeded by Peter S. Freer. Colonel Dimmick was a merchant here for a number of years.

J. Hopkins Dean did business here at one time, and erected a hotel in 1871. The railroad station was called Dean's for a time, and the place thus became locally known as Dean's Corners. The first train passed this station October 24th, 1871.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

HON. ORSON M. ALLABEN was born on the 5th of August, 1808, in the then town of Delhi, on a farm near DeLancy Station, on the Midland Railroad, now in Thunder. In March, 1821, his father settled on a new farm in the town of Roxbury, where young Allaben lived until he was sixteen years old, helping to clear up the farm, and in winter attending the district school, which was never nearer than two miles. When about sixteen years old he met with an accident by which he was disqualified from working on a farm, and then turned his attention to common school teaching, for which he was thought to be well qualified, and which he followed until past nineteen. He then entered the office of Dr. J. K. Cowles, of Roxbury, and commenced the study of medicine and surgery. He finished his common school education by attending several terms at the Delaware Academy, where he learned sufficient Latin to qualify him for the study of medicine. He began his medical course in November, 1827, graduated in 1831, receiving his diploma from Waterville College, Me., and immediately settled in Middletown, in June of that year. He was married to Miss Thankful Blumstick, daughter of Colonel Noah Blumstick, on the 17th of October, 1832. He was elected supervisor of Middletown in 1839, which office he has filled for seven terms. He was a member of the Assembly from Delaware county in 1840 and 1850, and a member of the Senate from that district in 1846 and 1856. In December, 1833, he moved to the present village of Margaretville, which then contained only three houses, but one of them on the present street, which had not then been opened. In 1836 he built his present residence. In 1837, he sold the first goods sold in Margaretville, converting his office into a small store. In the summer of 1838 he got a post office established there, making a visit to Washington for that purpose at his own expense, and held the office of postmaster for several years. In July, 1835, he started the Utilitarian newspaper, and conducted it for five years at an average loss of about $300. He had then brought it to a paying basis and sold out. In 1866 he finished a building, now used as a Baptist church, but which is designated for a Utilitarian school, to be conducted on the principle of lectures and recitations, and which was chartered in 1863 by an act to incorporate the Margaretville Utilitarian School. Dr. Allaben has always taken a deep interest in internal improvements, and as commissioner of highways has made many alterations in the public roads, and as a legislator procured the passage of the act assessing delinquent labor upon the real estate of the delinquent. In 1840 he procured a charter for a turnpike from the Ulster county line to Delhi, and as one of the commissioners saw it built. In 1865 he procured the first legislation relating to the present Ulster and Delaware Railroad, and was one of the directors from its commencement until it was finished to its present terminus, and has at different times held the positions of vice-president and general superintendent.

ASA AKERLY, son of Samuel and grandson of Jeremiah Akerly, who came to this county in the latter part of the last century, was born in Middletown in 1838, and married in 1857 to Nancy C., daughter of John Y. Dumond. At this time he was engaged in the grocery business; subsequently he ran a tannery on the lot now owned by Jacob Van Brahmier, but for the last twenty years he has carried on an extensive boot and shoe business in Margaretville.

NOAH DIMMICK, son of Colonel Noah Dimmick, was born January 1st, 1802. At the age of twenty-one he was married to Susan P., daughter of Ransom Wolcott. Their family consists of three sons and two daughters. Their son Samuel, enlisted in the 101st N. Y. and was transferred to the 11th and then to the 10th. He was captured at Cold Harbor, and was eleven months a prisoner at Andersonville. The subject of this sketch is a practical surveyor, and has been justice and deputy sheriff several years. He is one of the most systematic farmers in Middletown.

THE TOWN OF MIDDLETOWN.

THE town of Middletown was incorporated in 1789, as a part of Ulster county, being formed from the towns of Woodstock and Rochester, and took its name, no doubt, from the circumstance that at its formation white settlements had made no considerable progress beyond the Susquehanna valley—nearly the whole population of the State being included within the territory drained by the Hudson river, the Delaware and the Susquehanna. The Delaware is the middle valley, and the town contained nearly all that part of Ulster county lying within it. It is one of the original towns of Delaware county, as well as one of the oldest, and formerly covered all the territory of the present towns of Roxbury, Bovina, Middletown, Andes, Colchester and Hancock; nearly all of Stamford, a large part of Delhi, Hamden, Walton and Tompkins, and a small portion of Shandaken, in Ulster county, comprising more than half of the whole county of Delaware. By division it has been reduced to a territory of about fifty thousand acres, or seventy-nine square miles, with a population of about three thousand inhabitants, or thirty-eight to the square mile.

It lies in the southeast corner of the county, with Greene and Ulster counties on the east and south, and the towns of Roxbury, Bovina and Andes on the north and west. The Pepacton or east branch of the Delaware flows through it centrally, in a southwesterly direction, with the Batavia kill, Bush kill, Dry brook and Mill brook emptying into it from the east; and the Platte kill and several smaller streams from the west. Each of these streams drains a fertile valley, having a similar topography, being broader and less inclined in the upper and central portion, but becoming narrow and descending more rapidly as they approach the main valley, causing the streams to rush over rapids or falls, forming an abundance of excellent water power.

The surface is hilly, and in the eastern parts mountainous. East of the Delaware river spurs from the Catskills intersect the town, running in a southwesterly direction between the valleys, and are steep and rugged, but heavily timbered; west of the river they are less elevated and broader, and can usually be cultivated to the tops. All the hills are more steep and rocky on the northern and western sides, while toward the east and south they slope off gradually into good farming and grazing lands. The highest elevation is reached one and a half miles east of the village of Margaretville, at three thousand feet above tide.

The prevailing rock is the old red sandstone of the New York series, which is highly stratified, and in many localities furnishes excellent flagging and building stone, in quantities sufficient to warrant a considerable trade in that article when prices will pay for transportation. Underlying the sandstone is a red, shaly rock stratum of considerable thickness, which crops out in deep gorges where the water flow has worn through the sandstone, and sometimes makes its appearance on the hillsides; but more frequently on the tops, where the superincumbent strata have been worn away by the action of the elements. It is the disintegration of this rock which gives the red color to the soil, so noticeable in Delaware county, especially in the northern part.

The soil in the Delaware bottom is alluvial, composed of sand, loam and shale washed down from the mountain sides, and is very productive. It is the accumulation of ages, as shown by the position of pebble stones near the mouth of small streams, which, at the depth of twenty or more feet, show the same relation to the action of the water as on the surface. Driftwood is found at considerable depths, and everywhere the stones are worn smooth by the action of water. Corn and oats are especially adapted to this soil, and it produces excellent grass. The uplands contain a large percentage of clay, which, mixed with the other constituents of the soil, forms a hard pan, often impervious to water, and which, when near the surface, renders the cultivation of winter crops very difficult. This formation is better adapted to grazing purposes and the cultivation of timothy grass than grain raising; yet it produces good crops of oats, buckwheat and potatoes, and rye is frequently grown on the dry parts. Wheat was a staple crop when the country was new and the ashes of the burnt timber furnished the necessary alkali; but the want of lime in the soil has long since rendered its cultivation unprofitable. The best soil is found in localities where the red shale predominates. Analysis shows it to be rich in iron, and the color is no doubt derived from the red oxide of that metal. It produces good crops of all kinds; but is especially adapted to the cultivation of potatoes. As many as ten crops in succession have been produced from the same locality, without any apparent diminution in the yield. The great potato region of this county, however, is found in the more elevated towns of Stamford, Kortright and Harpersfield.

Middletown forms a part of the dairying region of, Delaware county. Apples are almost a natural production of the soil, and pears and plums flourish; but is too cold for peaches.

Maple, beech, birch, ash, basswood and oak are natural forest trees. The pine of early times and the forests of hemlock have now nearly disappeared, large quantities of which have been floated down the Delaware by lumbermen.

The population above referred to, about 3,000, was shown by the last State census to be 3,029, a figure reached by a general though not uninterrupted growth during the last forty-five years as the annexed census returns during that period (taken from the Legislative Manual) will show: 1835, 2,487; 1840, 2,608; 1845, 2,695; 1850, 3,005; 1855, 2,946; 1860, 3,201; 1865, 3,119; 1870, 3,035; 1875, 3,029.

The history of this mother of towns properly begins with a period when its territory was but a spot in the vast hunting grounds of the primitive tribes which claimed these valleys. Their unlettered generations have left but little to confirm the tradition of their existence, and more than a century ago the westward course of the white man's empire swept them away. Under the irrevocable law of progress, idleness gave way to thrift and industry, and the tents of the discontented were pitched toward the sunset.

Scarcely more penetrable is the mist of uncertainty that surrounds the traditions of the European races during the first half century of their occupancy.

The Canadian French were here about the time of the French and Indian war, but their few landmarks had also been nearly obliterated when the Dutch in 1763 began the permanent settlement. Thus has the stream of time carried the events of those two periods beyond the reach of our pen, and many of the trials and hardships of the early years of the present period have faded from the memories of men.

Not only to pass away, but to be forgotten, seems to be the destiny of us all, and brief indeed is that period whose history we are able to span.

A few, however, of the present generation cherish the traditions of the past, and to them the historian is chiefly indebted for his knowledge of civilization's struggle with savagery on the territory now smiling under careful cultivation, and thickly dotted with happy homes.

PAKATAKAN AND ITS PEOPLE.

This euphonious word, Pakatakan, in the dialect of the Tuscaroras was applied to the Indian village which was situated but a short distance above the present village of Margaretville, near the junction of the Bush kill with the east branch of the Delaware. The exact location is not marked, and the fact that the course of the river has materially changed renders the early description of its site quite indefinite.

The earthworks and chiseled rocks along the east branch have remained the longest of any traces which are left by the aboriginal occupants. Near the place where Mill brook empties into the Delaware are the remains of earthworks, in the usual form of rude fortifications, which are certainly artificial formations, but by whom or when constructed is purely conjectural. The two are each of a circular form, and were surrounded with an embankment inside of a deep ditch which contained four to six feet of water, supplied from a small stream in the rear of this fort. Both have been partially filled by frequent plowing, and trees are growing in the ditch around one of them.

The marvelous number of arrow-heads and rude flint axes found near these spots is corroborative evidence, at least, of the nature and use of these curious antiquities.

There has been no little speculation concerning an artificial cave near Arkville, upon the interior walls of which rude hieroglyphics were carved. Some fifty years ago a party of about twenty Indians came to the town from one of the western reservations, and visited several places which have their interesting traditions. The old burying ground on the Dumond farm was visited, and they then spent a good deal of time in the cave here spoken of.

There was a trail from Pakatakan to the great meadows of Roxbury, by which those of the Indians who gave any attention to agriculture, and those of the whites who owned live stock, reached the vast pasture fields near the present village of Roxbury.

IN THE BEGINNING.

So vague and uncertain are the traditions of the French settlers that we will be led by this topic back only to the spring of 1763. During the fall and winter previous a party was formed in Hurley, Ulster county, N. Y., to explore the Delaware valley, and, if expedient, to make arrangements for emigrating thither with their families.

Four families made the experiment, and bought four farms on great lot No. 7, on the Middletown flats, in 1763. The deeds are dated April 9th of that year, and the purchase price was twenty shillings per acre.

Harmonus Dumond bought the farm across the river from Margaretville, and his brother, Peter Dumond, took a farm up the river, near the present residence of Elijah A. Olmsted. Johannes Von Woggoner settled part of the Cockburn farm. The farm is so called from William Cockburn, a surveyor, who was in the employ of the Livingstons in 1774, and received this fine farm of six hundred acres for a part of his compensation. He also in 1797 made the survey and map locating the line between Delaware and Ulster counties. This line was resurveyed officially in 1874, and the marked trees were then standing, on some of which the date was still legible.

Peter Hendricks located on the farm now owned by Noah Dimmick. Hendricks's wife was a widow Kittle, and her son, Frederick Kittle, has been spoken of as the fifth early settler, but the fact is he came with his step-father at the age of sixteen years. This farm is generally known as the Kittle farm, and in this way: Mr. Hendricks made a will giving his son a musket, and his step-son the farm. It is believed that this family purchased of one of the French Canadians, who had returned after the French and Indian troubles had subsided.

The little Dutch colony thus planted continued to increase by immigration, and within eight years numbered nine families. Of these, William Philip Henry Yaple came to the Elias Carpenter place in 1771. He evidently came to the settlement on more than one errand, for his fortunes were at once shared by Dumond's daughter Nelly. Other settlers were Simeon Von Woggoner, Slyter, Green, Hinebaugh and Bierch. All the settlers thus far had maintained friendly relations with the Indians, but during the first years of the Revolutionary troubles complications arose, by which the property, the freedom, and in some instances the lives of the colonists were sacrificed.

The settlers were not all in sympathy with the colonists in their Revolutionary measures, and thus a feeling arose in which the Indians took sides with the office and deposit them in a box nailed to the "old Elm," a short distance from the village.

The "old elm" post-box answered the purpose for several years, but in 1850 the Lumberville office was established, and John Y. Tompkins was appointed postmaster.

The Clovesville office was the second one established in Middletown. John Beadle was the first postmaster, and he held the office for thirty years. This office supplied the communities now supplied by the Griffin's Corners office, which was established by the appointment of Matthew Griffin postmaster in 1848. Mr. Griffin served until 1879, when he was succeeded by his son, Dewitt Griffin.

The Arkville office dates from 1837, when Noah Dimmick was appointed postmaster.

Margaretville was made a post station June 15th, 1848, and Dr. O. M. Allaben was commissioned postmaster. The present incumbent is Hon. G. G. Decker. A daily New York mail is supplied via the Ulster & Delaware Railroad.

For about thirty years New Kingston has been supplied with a weekly or semi-weekly mail from Margaretville. The returns to the postal department from this office for the first quarter amounted to eighteen cents. Halcottville is one of the oldest post-offices in the town. Mathew Halcott, from whom the place received its name, was given the first appointment.

There is an office at Clark's Factory, and in 1873 one was established at Kelly's Corners, with W. T. Ryer as the postmaster.

These nine offices are the post-offices of the town, the Middletown and Clovesville offices, having been discontinued several years ago.

The construction of the Esopus and Ithaca turnpike, the date and particulars of which appear in other parts of this work, gave the town excellent facilities for communication with the outside world. The course of this great thoroughfare was on the roadbed of the Delhi and Arkville turnpike, as it now is, excepting between Margaretville and Clark's Factory, where it ran over the hill farther back from the river, on the same side; crossed the New Kingston road at the foot of the hill north of Margaretville, and continued up the valley past the cemetery and on to Arkville. From Arkville up the river it went by the way of the present highway as far as Griffin's Corners, where it diverged to the left and crossed the valley at the foot of Pine Hill, on an immense high bridge, and left the town and county near the summit. Noah Ellis had the contract for the construction of this division of the road.

A turnpike company was chartered in 1811 to build a turnpike from Arkville to Moresville, but the work was never completed.

The Arkville and Delhi turnpike was chartered in 1840, and was begun in 1843, but the unsettled state of affairs in 1845 necessitated a delay, and it was not completed until 1849. It was thirty-three miles long, extending from the top of Pine Hill to Delhi, and was constructed at a cost of $485 per mile. The commissioners were: Hon. O. M. Allaben, Isaac Burr and Dr. Peake, of Andes.

The most available route of communication at the present time is the Ulster and Delaware railroad. This road was begun in 1869 as the New York and Oswego, and in 1874, after being completed as far as Stamford and the name changed several times, it was sold on a mortgage, and became the property of Thomas Cornell.

A law was passed on the 7th of April, 1866, authorizing certain towns in Delaware, Ulster and Greene counties to issue town bonds bearing seven per cent. interest, and to invest the proceeds of their sale in the capital stock of the Rondout and Oswego Railroad.

George G. Decker, O. M. Allaben (who was vice-president of the company), and Lemuel Sines were appointed commissioners to issue the bonds; $100,000 worth of bonds were issued, of the denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000, and are payable, principal and interest, at the First National Bank of Rondout. Six annual installments of $5,000 each have been paid upon the principal, and the balance matures in installments during the next fourteen years.

EARLY RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Religion, as well as education, received early attention at the hands of the primitive Dutchmen. Very soon after the return of the refugees at the close of the Revolution a church was erected in the old churchyard above Lumberville. It was a Dutch Reformed Presbyterian institution, and although its exact date was lost by the destruction of its records, yet enough remains in private writings to fix its date prior to 1790. Rev. Messrs. Gooches and Meyers were the preachers in early days. Probably the first supply of preaching was by a one-legged man by the name of Anderson, who afterward became a sort of doctor and fortune-teller. This church was in ruins and abandoned before 1835, and a part of the site has since been used for burial places.

The Old School Baptist church had an organization in the town, in which Anna Grant is remembered as being a very earnest worker. They held religious meetings in the old school-house in district number 10. Rev. Mr. Seymour was their preacher for several years.

CEMETERIES.

Probably the oldest burying place in the county, and surely the oldest in the town, is the old cemetery on the Dumond farm, across the river from Margaretville. It was used by the early Dutch settlers, and they believed it to have been occupied long before by the half breeds who preceded them.

This place contains the graves of some of the children of the original settlers, but for years it has been entirely neglected. The bed of the proposed railroad is over it, and in grading, many of the bones of unknown dead were exhumed.

The Indian graves on the knoll opposite the Cockburn house have long since been covered by a cultivated field.

There is another ancient burying ground above Margaretville, on the Dimmick farm, which was begun by the settlers of 1763. Peter Hendricks, the first adult who died in the settlement, was the first person buried here. His wife, the mother of Frederick Kittle, Frederick Kittle's wife, and Elijah Olmsted's wife were among those who were buried here very early.

The burying ground above Lumberville is nearly a century old. The first grave that is marked is that of Captain Samuel Dunham, July 27th, 1792. The new burying ground is on a lot given for a church building lot by John Y. Tompkins. The first grave was that of Benjamin Akerly, January 28th, 1859.

ARKVILLE,

a mile above Margaretville, on the Bush kill, is one of the oldest business points. Soon after the return of the settlers at the close of the Revolution occurred what was known as the "pumpkin freshet." Coming in the fall of the year, before the crops had been gathered, the pumpkins floated off the fields until the river was covered by them. The water on this occasion rose in the night so as to inundate the flats and almost submerge the sleeping Dutchmen. The first alarm to one family came from an altercation between the children sleeping in the old-fashioned trundle-bed. When the venerable sire jumped in rage from his bed to settle the fuss, he found that neither of the boys could be blamed for the discomfiture, for the water had risen so that he stood on his own floor in water knee deep. The elevated position of the block tavern at the time of this flood afterward suggested the name of Arkville.

Here Simeon Von Woggoner kept the first tavern in Middletown, in a double block-house on the site of the elegant residence of Mr. Longyear. The entrance was surmounted by the largest pair of antlers that had ever been known.

The landlord also built the first grist-mill in this part of the town, and one of the first in the county. The mill property was afterward owned by Jonathan Hasbrook, who sold it to Colonel Noah Dimmick in 1826. Mr. Dimmick added much to the business of the place and erected the present mills.

During his time it was the principal business center in the town, and militia training and town meetings were held here.

The first store here was kept by one Newkirk, who was succeeded by Peter S. Freer. Colonel Dimmick was a merchant here for a number of years.

J. Hopkins Dean did business here at one time, and erected a hotel in 1871. The railroad station was called Dean's for a time, and the place thus became locally known as Dean's Corners. The first train passed this station October 24th, 1871.

CLOVESVILLE,

on the Bush kill, at the mouth of the Red kill, is one of the oldest business places. The building of the old turnpike through here gave it its first impetus. Noah Ellis built a store here in 1806, and eight years later Abram Beadle opened a hotel. John Winn built a hotel here before 1799; it was the first frame house ever built in Middletown, and stood until quite recently. There is a tradition that Mr. Winn was mobbed and hung for his disloyalty after the settlement of peace at the close of the Revolution.

Ezra Waterbury built a carding and cloth dressing establishment here. He removed in 1828. George W. Doolittle in 1843 built a carding-mill on the same site, and twenty years later he built a saw-mill there. The last saw-mill here is owned by John Kelly. Humphrey's tannery has been abandoned, and the whole place has a kind of goneaway look, as though the enterprise of the hamlet had gone up stream, or floated down—which is about as near the truth as we can get.

GRIFFIN'S CORNERS,

farther up the Bush kill, was named from the Griffin family, who were among the early business and professional men. The first business here was the rum business, begun in 1804 by a Mr. Taylor, in the house where Allen Lasher now lives. Baxter Mullenix and a Mr. Searl also were among those who ministered to the thirst and hunger of the people half a century ago.

In August, 1845, Matthew Griffin, who had kept a store in 1833 on the site of Esquire Ten Broeck's house, built the old red store now standing on Main street, and three years later he put up the Griffin's Corners Hotel, which he carried on until 1855.

The old grist-mill, which stood just below the Star Mills as early as 1802, was owned by Noah Ellis, Horace Ellis, and finally by John D. Vandermark, who kept a store in 1844 as successor to his brother-in-law, Noah Ellis, jr. The Star Mills were built in 1829. The steam mill here, the only steam saw-mill in the town, was built by Allen Lasher. He also owns the grist-mill above.

One of the enterprises which have come up stream from Clovesville is the wool carding business of George W. Doolittle, which now occupies part of the Star Mills. This machine is surely one of the old settlers, having been built more than a century ago. It is the same one upon which the present owner served his apprenticeship fifty years ago, in the village of Hobart.

The turnpike was built where it now is, between Griffin's Corners and the top of Pine hill, in 1834. The oldest building now standing is the General Armstrong house, on the hill east of the village. The old school-house stood where Mr. Ludkey's house now is. The present school building was raised in 1851, and the first term in it was taught by James Taylor, for $15 per month.

LUMBERVILLE

is, as its name implies, a village that sprung up as one of the results of the great lumbering business on the east branch. It is situated at the mouth of Mill brook.

John Dickson, a settler of 1784, opened the first store here in 1795. His house was then the only one in the place, and it may be understood that "store keeping" at that day was not what we understand now by that term. His book shows that he dealt only in the plainest necessities (including whiskey), and his customers were principally the lumbermen and raftsmen on the river.

William Akerly kept a tavern here in 1810. In 1841 a stock company was formed to build a house for church and school purposes, schools having been kept in private residences until that time. This building was subsequently purchased by school district 11, and served until the completion of the elegant new school building in 1878.

N. E. Conklin built a hotel here in 1872, but that was one of the many ventures made during the time when there was prospect of a railroad being finished through the place. The Bryant Hotel was built in 1854 by James H. Dickson. Three years previous he had built the Lemuel Sines store.

The new Methodist church is quite an addition to the tidy appearance of the place.

CLARK'S FACTORY

is a post station on the Platte kill, named from a family of Clarks, who have been prominent citizens and business men at this point. The first tannery in Middletown was built here before 1811, by Abram I. Shults. The vats were made time the town was erected. It then included No. 4, and the log school-house on Jonathan H. Scudder's farm had been the district building. Before that, however, a log school-house had stood near the large rock on the west side of Gilbert Moseman's farm. This also was for both districts. The first frame school-house in the town was built for this district in 1836, and burned in 1853. The present building was then erected on the same site.

No. 3.—The first school in this district was kept in a building near Halcott Centre, on the south side of the hill road, and later in a log dwelling house north of the Centre, on the farm where Mrs. Crosby now lives. The first school building was erected in 1834. This stood until 1871, when it was sold and its place better filled by the neat structure now standing, which was built by David Crosby at a cost of $590.

No. 4.—This district was set off from No. 2 in 1851, and the school-house was erected the same year. The first teacher in it was Adelia M. Pulling, who taught twenty-five pupils for fifteen weeks at two dollars per week. Eighteen years later the school-house was sold to Hiram Mead for $17.50, and it is now the residence of Mrs. Dolly Sherwood. The present school-house was erected by David Earl, in 1869.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Before the erection of this town a post-office was kept at Conger Avery's, and he was the postmaster. The office was then West Lexington, and was supplied by a weekly mail from Prattsville to Griffin's Corners.

Amasa Hill afterward kept the office where Robert Moseman lives, and about this time the name was changed to Halcott Centre. He was succeeded by Austin Chase, who distributed the mail in the house where Orson Ballard now lives. At this time William Osterhoudt carried the mail, but the office was discontinued, and the Griffin's Corners-Prattsville route was abandoned.

When the present office was established it was supplied by a semi-weekly mail from Griffin's Corners, which arrangement still continues, with Mrs. Isaac T. Moseman as postmistress.

SOME BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.

The first attempt at "store keeping" was made by Ralph Coe at a point fifty or sixty rods south of the M. E. church, and in the same building either he or — Bradley kept the first inn.

The next tavern was kept on the present farm of Hon. Buel Maben, by Nathan Applebee, but it has been years since any public house has been kept in the town.

The first saw-mill was erected by Frederick Banker in 1824, on the site of the one now owned by Philip Fellows. Another was subsequently built by Martin Brooks, where Alexander Van Volkenburgh's saw-mill and cabinet shop now stands.

At a period more remote than any of these enterprises there was an ashery operated by one Hamican, on the farm of Eli Mead, where it is probable he made a settlement about the year 1816.

Richard Norris was an early blacksmith in the eastern part of the town. The only shop now is carried on by Horace Peet. James M. Moseman, successor to Isaac T. Moseman, is the only merchant in the town.

RAILROADING.

When the Rondout & Oswego Railroad was proposed, the town of Halcott issued $10,000 of bonds to aid in its construction. These bonds were of the denomination of $500, and bear seven per cent. interest, payable on the first of February in each year. The first installment, of $500, of principal was paid in 1874. One bond becomes due each year thereafter, until the whole number, twenty, are paid.

The road was sold under a mortgage, and thus the stock which the town held was made worthless; but the road was built, and they have the advantage of a railway and telegraph station at Griffin's Corners, about four miles from Halcott Centre.

HALCOTT IN THE CIVIL WAR.

Many of the Halcott boys who swelled the ranks of the Union army were members of Company G, 144th regiment, and their names and their sacrifices are there recorded. A few, however, went out in other organizations. Jacob Fellows, Company B, 43d regiment, enlisted in 1861, and was discharged the same year for injuries received. Silas Morrison, Company G, 20th N. Y., enlisted in 1861, was discharged in 1863. Hiram Hubbard, 1st N. Y. volunteer engineers, enlisted in October, 1864; was discharged in June, 1865.

THE METHODIST CHURCH.

Methodism in Halcott dates from the year 1829, when Rev. John P. Van Volkenburgh experienced religion and became an exhorter among the people. The first class, organized by Rev. Mr. Calder in 1830, consisted of Thomas Halcott, Reuben Gordon, Archibald Morrison, Nehemiah Covell, Joseph Halstead, John Moseman, Gibbons Griffins and their wives; Timothy Tyler and Joseph Brooks, with Mr. Van Volkenburgh as leader.

This class and congregation met in private houses, school-houses and barns for twenty years, when the present church building was erected. It was dedicated on the 29th of December, 1849. The appointment has always been a part of the Clovesville circuit, and regular services have been held by their pastors, whose names appear in the history of that circuit. Mr. Van Volkenburgh has been their local preacher; generations have grown up under his ministry, and the sermons he has preached, as precept, and the life he has lived, as example, have left their impress for good upon the minds and the hearts of the most of them. He was licensed to preach in 1833 and ten years after was ordained, since which time, and even to his ripe old age, he is yet laboring in the field of his choice.

BAPTIST CHURCH OF HALCOTT.

Letters of dismissal from the First Baptist church of Roxbury were granted to some members March 30th, 1822, for the purpose of forming a church nearer Middletown. Steps were immediately taken for the organization of such a church, and a meeting called on the 1st of May following at the house of Noah Dimmick, where the feasibility of organizing this new church was discussed. The meeting adjourned to the 29th of the same month, when the church was organized by a council composed of delegates from Marbletown, Lexington and Roxbury churches. It is recorded that "the Middletown and Roxbury Church was organized at the house of Noah Dimmick, of Middletown, on the 29th of May, 1822, with Elder James Mead as pastor. The members to be those who had taken letters from the First Baptist Church of Roxbury for this purpose."

Elder Mead continued as pastor until his death, which occurred May 17th, 1856. On the 18th of March, 1841, Daniel Morrison, of Halcott, was ordained. He occasionally supplied the pulpit for Elder Mead. In June, 1856, he became the pastor, and continued in that relation until his death, October 30th, 1859.

Elder Hewitt and Elder Alling supplied the society occasionally, and in 1861 arrangements were made for preaching once a month, Elder Hewitt and Elder Fuller alternating. In 1870 Elder Buel Maben was ordained to preach, and he is now the resident pastor. The first deacon was Shubal Dimmick. The present deacon is David Earl, who is also a licensed preacher.

At first meetings were held in private houses; Mr Noah Dimmick and Mr. James Blish being the earliest who opened their houses for religious services. In 1823 Mr. Dimmick built a school-house known as the Dimmick school-house, where meetings were held, and some are living who speak of the school-house, with the cushioned seat by the rostrum for Deacon Dimmick, who was a cripple. In 1847 a church was built in the town of Halcott, but the "old church" was long since abandoned, and the society now hold their meetings in what is known as the Fly school-house.

Of the original members, of whom there were seventy-two, it is thought that none are living. The church was known as the Middletown and Roxbury church until 1860, when the name was changed to Middletown and Halcott, and still later to Halcott.

E. Kelly, jr., was clerk of this church from 1831 to 1834; Ethiel Travis from 1834 to 1846; James T. Streeter from 1846 to 1861; the present clerk is James Miller, who is also a licensed preacher.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

BENJAMIN BALLARD, a prominent farmer, was born in Roxbury in 1806. He was married in 1833 to Eliza, daughter of Thomas Berry, of Roxbury, and came the same year to Halcott, where she died in 1853. His present wife, Clara, is a daughter of Thomas Kelley. His farm of three hundred and thirty acres was part settled by Tenant Peck in 1814, part by Gilbert Griffin and the remainder by himself. Mr. Ballard has served his town in important trusts.

ORSON BALLARD, son of Benjamin Ballard, was born in 1835. He was married in 1875 to Augusta, daughter of Solomon Osterhoudt, of Middletown, and granddaughter of Elias Osterhoudt. Mr. B. has filled various official positions, and has a dairy farm of ninety-six acres, besides a sheep farm, in Halcott.

BENJAMIN L. CROSBY, the most extensive farmer and the oldest man now living in the town, was born at Kelley's Corners in 1797. In 1819 he was married to Huldah Hull, who died in 1843. Ten years before her death they removed to Halcott, where Mr. Crosby has now a farm of nine hundred and ninety-nine acres, and a dairy of eighty cows. His present wife is Elizabeth Dickson, to whom he was married in 1845. The family of ten children are all living except Eli, who died in 1873. David is yet at the homestead; Thomas is a prosperous farmer in Missouri; Sally is Mrs. Vanderburgh, in Iowa; Edward is a merchant at Kingston; Lorina is a milliner at Margaretville, and the others are also well situated in life, as may be seen from other pages of this work. Mr. Crosby has been railroad commissioner and justice of peace, and has always been prominently identified with the leading enterprises of his town.

DAVID EARL, a deacon in the Baptist church, was born in Roxbury in 1823, and at the age of twenty-one was married to William Falconer's daughter, Amelia A. The following year they removed to Halcott, where they have been prosperously engaged in farming. Of their four children Dennis was married in 1873 to Emeline Streeter, Luther in 1877 to Ida Peck, Emma J. in January, 1878, to Eli Mead, and William in May, 1870, to Louisa J., daughter of Daniel Van Volkenburgh. Part of Mr. Earl's farm was settled in 1817 by Otis Miller, and part by Levi Ellis.

ELI JENKINS, a successful farmer, came to the town of Halcott in 1843, and two years after was married to Emily Judd. They have three sons and one daughter. Their daughter is Mrs. J. Mead. Wilson is a farmer at Halcott, and Eli D. is at home.

His son ARTHUR B. JENKINS was born in 1832, and married in 1871 to Esther J. Earl, only child of William Earl, who died in 1872.

WILLIAM JOHNSON, son of Sylvester Johnson and Polly Brazer, was born in 1846. He is a prominent stock farmer, owning the farm which was settled by his ancestors. Mr. J. has been constable and collector of Halcott, and has made more of a specialty of raising stock than any other man in the town.

SILAS LAKE, one of the prosperous farmers of Halcott, was born in 1829. He is a son of Curtis Lake, who came to this town in 1832 and died in 1866. Mr. L. has been prominent in local politics, having been twice elected supervisor and once justice of peace. His farm was settled by Peter H. Miller.

HON. BUEL MABEN, supervisor of the town, is a son of Benjamin Maben and grandson of John Maben, a pioneer of Lexington. He came to Halcott in 1832, and six years later was married to Abigail, sister of Dr. O. M. Allaben, of Margaretville. Their family consists of two young ladies, yet at home; another daughter, Mrs. Amasa J. Shaver, of Meredith; Sarah A., wife of Dr. Tefft, of Utica; Jonathan A. and Alanson J., jewelers at Utica, and W. B. Maben, attorney at law in Brooklyn. Mr. Maben has been once before supervisor of the town, and represented the first Assembly district of Greene county in the Legislature of 1856.

ROSWELL MILLER, a prominent farmer of Halcott, is a son of Henry G. and grandson of Jacob Miller. His first wife, Mary Heusted, died in 1875, and he was married the following year to Julia, daughter of Jacob Shaver, of Meredith. Their family consists of two sons and three daughters. Mr. Miller has a dairy farm of two hundred acres, well located, which was settled by Reuben Baker.

JAMES MILLER, a son of Peter H. and grandson of Jacob Miller, an early settler in Halcott in 1816, was born in 1825, and married in 1848 to Polly M., daughter of John G. Van Volkenburgh. Their only child now living is Mrs. Jonathan Whitney, who was married in 1869. Mr. Miller has been for nine years assessor, and one term supervisor of Halcott.

HIRAM MEAD, one of the substantial farmers of Halcott, is a son of Eli Mead, who was a brother of Revs. James and David Mead. He was born in 1818 in Middletown, and removed to Halcott in 1852, where he has served the town as assessor seven or eight years and once as supervisor. For three years Mr. Mead was captain in a militia company in Colonel Jacob Mead's regiment. His grandmother was an American spy in the Revolution. Mr. Mead's wife, to whom he was married in 1873, was Alice E. Hall.

ISAAC THORNE MOSEMAN was born in Roxbury January 30th, 1823; married Emily Morse, of that town, in 1851, and came to Halcott in 1853. His earlier life was spent as a public teacher, but in Halcott he was a merchant until his death, which occurred September 29th, 1869. Mr. Moseman was a prominent officer in the M. E. church, and besides serving his town as supervisor for several years, he so served his fellow men as to be universally respected by them. His son, James M. Moseman, was born in 1853, and married in 1875 to Annie E. Dewey, of Catskill. He is the only merchant in the town, and has represented Halcott in the board of supervisors and as town clerk.

REV. JOHN P. VAN VOLKENBURGH, who was born in Rensselaer county November 9th, 1800, is the only survivor of the original settlers of this town. He is a son of Peter L., a captain in the Revolution, and grandson of John Van Volkenburgh, who came to Albany county from Holland before the American Revolution. The subject of this sketch came with his widowed mother to Halcott on the 28th of September, 1813, and eight years later was married to Jemima, daughter of Daniel Griffin, who, about 1805, settled in the northern part of Middletown. In 1842 he was ordained by the M. E. church, having previously preached nine years under a license. Mr. Van Volkenburgh has taken a prominent part in the politics of his town in his younger days, and has lived to see a prosperous family of six sons and three daughters grow up around him.
