FOREWORD

As you look through the charts that follow, they will confirm what most people have known all along -- that Orange County, Californians have roots somewhere else.

What became Orange County, spun off from Los Angeles County in 1889, was a mixture of cattle ranches, farms and orange groves, with scant Anglo population.

Land promoters of the late 19th and early 20th centuries persuaded thousands of midwesterners to settle here with tales of glorious abundance and ideal climate, depicted in advertising by sun drenched orange groves. Anaheim, which was to become the home of Disneyland, was founded in 1862 by fifty German families from San Francisco who hoped to produce wines and brandies. They were defeated by disease which killed their vines; only the first of a series of natural disasters. With courage and fortitude, these hardy folk survived.

There were hard times aplenty. The depression years of 1935-36 saw an influx of 350,000 itinerant farm workers, refugees from the dust bowl of Oklahoma and Texas. They took whatever work they could get and many later found jobs in the aircraft factories of World War II. Others, who came to train for war, or who merely passed through, determined to return after the war, and return they did in large numbers.

The collossus to the north, Los Angeles, continued to overshadow Orange County well into the sixties, but things began to change. The ranches, farms and orange groves of Orange County gave way to sprawling new communities, high tech industry, high rise office complexes, and jammed freeways. A dramatic transformation has occurred in half a lifetime.

Always, the attraction has been economic opportunity and the best climate in the world.

The men and women who submitted these pedigrees do not represent a true cross section of Orange County's present day ethnic composition. Hispanics and Asians now comprise a significant and growing part of the population.

The majority of Orange County California Genealogical Society members have their roots somewhere else. They, or their forebears, came from Wisconsin, North Dakota, Ohio, Tennessee, Kansas, North Carolina, Oklahoma, and, indeed, all points east. They are the descendants of over 350 years of immigration to America's shores.
