Dear Lyle,

Thought I would send you the enclosed "Dolphin History", that I finally deciphered from that unreadable copy I sent to you months ago. If you remember a Robert Dolphin sent this to me from Florida and claims his father wrote this back in the 1920's. Robert is from England and the pedigree he sent me of his family would indicate his Dolphin's are the Swanshurst branch (around Brimingham).

The reference to Dr. W. Greenwell and his statement (highlighted) is the one that interested me, as I am sure this is our Dolphin's. The fact that there was another clan in County Durham is also very interesting because the 1841 England census shows all the Dolphin brothers working in the great coal fields of Durham in Westerton and Counden, not to far from Edmundbryes, Lanchester and Wolsingham or delves Consett.

Perhaps Anthony and I can shed more light on this in England. Enclosed is a copy of a picture Anthony sent to me so I will recognize him at the airport.

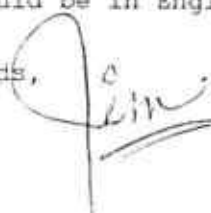

I spent 3 days deciphering this document with a magnifying glass and running up to the copy shop to enlarge, darken and try to make clearer. There are some words I still could not figure out so I show those as blank lines.

Wonder if the reference books mentioned, that are by Charles Kingsley and Shaw are still available? Or anything by this Dr. W. Greenwell (whoever he is). I will take this with me to show interested parties in England.

Ken called me today, he found out there is electricity at Belmont Mounds, it sounds like a shelter and lights also. I told him you will be coming over soon to take a look. He told me he had 21 responses so far (I do not know if that is individuals or couples). I sent out just over 200 and I figured on a 10% to 25% response return. There are some who are not planning to eat but will be stopping by. This has sparked renewed interest in the genealogy as I am getting more information forms that I sent out 1 to 2 years ago from people who just laid them aside and forgot the forms.

I should be in England when you receive this!

Regards,

SOME DOLPHIN HISTORY

In the time of Bishop Edmund, 1029, King Knute came on a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Cuthbert and walked barefoot from Garmondsway Hill, on the Sedgefield Road, five miles from Durham. He conferred on the church the whole of Staindrop, with its villages and hamlets. This estate was granted in 1131 by the then Prior and convent of Durham to one Dolfyn. From Dolfyn it has descended to the present Lord Barnard..

HENEWARD

Charles Kingsley in "Howeard The Wake", gives a gopatric pedigree and adds some uncomplimentary remarks about Thos Dolfyn. One Dolfyn, possibly a relation of the first governor of Carlise was given to cutting his name in the west wall of the south transept of Carliale Cathedral, protected by a sheet of glass, is a Runic inscription of about the year 1150 - "Dolfiin wrote these names on this stone". (Acliane N. S. Va)

Dr. W. Greenwell said Dolfyn was a son of "Odin". He believed the English family were all of Norse origin, for Dolfyns and Thorfins came in large numbers with the north (Viking) invasion. They seem to have penetrated in as far as Arkengarthdale (Swaledale area) near Richmond, where one family settled. These were the probable ancestors of the Yorkshire cricketer, but not of the Dolphins of the Delves Consett, the branch which is recorded in the Edmundbryes, Lanchester and Wolsingham, (county Durham) church registers. The Staindrop registers were burned in a fire.

Venetian Motto

In 1190 Robert, son of Dolphinus de Cluther, obtained a grant of land from Wilfred and the Canons of Ripon; and so did one Nicholas Filius Dolfini, probably of the Arkengarthdale branch. Another colony founded Swanshurst, a manor in the parish of Yardley, near Birmingham, now Hosuley, where it is stated King Alfred once stayed. Some of the Swanshurst Dolfyns would afterwards take part in the struggle of Venico. For a fine portrait of the procurator (the governor of a territory in the Roman empire) Daniele Dolfin, painted by Longhi, hangs, still in the Venice galleries. A Dolfyn, who was created a count by the Doge (chief magistrate in the former republics of Venice and Genoa) in 1297, has his name inscribed in the golden book of Venice as a family entitled to bear arms among the nobility.

To this day the English Dolphins retain in their motto, " FRANCE LEALE TOGE " (Free and loyal to the Doge) and their arms (shield) are three dolphins naient and described by John Quillie (1660) as a Venetian Coat. The family crest, a swan, dates from Swayn's Hurst, which in time became Swanshurst, but Shaw's history of Staffordshire (1801), wrongly derives the name of the manor from " a woody place frequented by swans ".

Shaw gives a full account of the Swanhurst Dolphins from the time of Edward III onwards, there are also some records in the Birmingham (England) Public Library. In Swanshurst a fine old timbered house was standing until 50 years ago (about 1878). Part of it's timber and the old fireplace have since been rebuilt into another house, retaining the Swanshurst style and _____ life.

One of the Swanhurst Dolphins became M.P. and High Sheriff of Stafford and carried up the country address to George I. He removed from Swanhurst to the Manor of the Moss at Shenstone near Litchfield, a residence so enclosed with " walls and woods as to appear more like a house of religious devotees than the seat of a gentleman " (Shaw). His nephew John Dolphin, carried up the country address to George III. The portraits of three of these Shenstone Dolphins were painted by Sir Godfrey Lnellor. This branch migrated again one hundred years later to Eyeford Manor in Gloucestershire, where Milton wrote " Paradise Lost ". The Eyeford Dolphin is described as a " useful and valuable person in the commission of the peace continually employed in composing differences ".

His great nephew, Vernon Dolphin, was founder of the Four - in - Hand Club if report speaks true and a noted whip. Vernon became famous in a Chancery suit which legal students have still to " get up " for their examinations. His wife started with Florence Nightingale to the Crimea, but she did not get further than Malta. Vernon Dolphin was supported at one time by the tradesmen whose fortunes his extravagance had made. At another time he drove a bus. He lived to a extreme old age.

A grandson of the Eyeford Dolphins played in the first Oxford and Cambridge cricket match in a top hat.. When he played with it at Lords, the papers asked him who he was in mourning for ? His son was the first to bring a cricket bat. Previously bats were only pegged.

Thus the Swanshurst Dolphins became scattered. One of them Richard Dolfyn, in 1379 became vicar (parish priest) of Tamworth, another James Dolfyn, in 1496 went to Bristol and became _____ of a church there. Johannus Dolfyn in 1646 became rector of Broadway and another was Canon of York and rector of Wakes Coine in Essex. Hubert Dolfyn went to Galway, Ireland and founded the Irish branch. Thomas Dolphin distinguished himself in the Barbadoes and the records of him exist in the Russell Coates Museum at Bournemouth, England.

Some of the family now reside in New Zealand and the names and addresses of others are to be found in Ruvigny's Plantagenant Roll. How a blood strain persists may be gathered from the fact that there are only two clergy of the name in the Church of England today. Though no relationship can be traced for five generations back, their signatures are sufficiently alike to be mistaken. The Dolphins who remained on at Swanshurst as the centuries passed, fell on evil times and some seventy years ago (about 1860), they died out.

To answer Miss Laura Smithron's question which started the correspondence, her Dolphin ancestor came from the Delves, Consett area as did the Dolphins recorded in the Edmundbyres and Wolsingham _____. It would seem probable that they were connected with Swanshurst, for John Dolphin, land grant to Lord Coventry, and _____ (buried at Lanchester sometime after 1820) _____ to the Damaris Dolphin of Shenstone, (born 1695) who became the wife of Rev. J. Ran A.M. abscribed by Shaw as " Late of Delves in _____ ". Their children died without issue and Delves will have been willed by a Damaris to a Dolphin, who being a descendant of the Eyeford branch may therefore be a remote cousin to these _____.

Hintage.—A baron of this name, who accompanied WILLIAM the Conqueror to England, got possession of the district on which Carlisle now stands. WILLIAM the Conqueror, on his return from the invasion of Scotland, liking the situation, ordered his barons to fortify it, which was accordingly done. It appears that the succeeding monarch, WILLIAM II., was so pleased with the situation, that he expelled Dolphus, then lord of the district (1092), peopled it with a colony from the south of England, and built a castle for their protection. One of the grandsons of the expelled Dolphus is stated to have gone to Ireland, and to have been amongst the first of the Anglo-Norman invaders who settled in Connaught; certain it is, that by ancient records, and other authorities, we find that the Dolphus have continued to reside in the immediate vicinity of their present seat, Tuero, for nearly six hundred years. To Thomas Dolphus, the son of John of Gouibully (which adjoins Tuero), were granted the customs of Galway, by letters-patent from EDWARD II., bearing date 4th May, 1307. The Dolphus family suffered much, in 1466, by the war between Mac William Bourke FitzRichard, &c., and Clancarde. It is stated in the annals of Ireland, that Mac William Bourke FitzRichard, and his allies, had waste the country as far as Clancarde, and on their return, entered the parishes of the Dolphus, burning and destroying everything that came within their reach, particularly about Tulluban, which then belonged to the Dolphus family.

In 1585, Redmond Dolphus, of Rathreddy, as chief of his name, entered, with other chieftains of Connaught, into a composition with Sir John Perrot, on the part of Queen ELIZABETH, for his property and that of other members of his family.

Descendants of James Taylor of Great Britain and Ireland. Burke (1858) E-FW B95L

DOL

By an inquisition taken on the 16th September, 1917, it was found that the following members of the Dolphin family were seized in fee of their respective demesnes and other lands, viz: Redmond Dolphin, of Rathroddy; James Dolphin, of Shanvallynamgardagh; William Rough Dolphin, of Caharduff; Redmond Dolphin FitzPatrick, of Carinargod; Redmond-Oge Dolphin, of Bruckloonmore; William-Oge Dolphin, of Turroo, was seized in fee of Turroo and other lands; and Walter and Edmund were seized in fee of half cartrons, in Turroo. By letters-patent, dated at Dublin, 27th March, 1619, all the several lands above recited were granted to said several proprietors and to their heirs, to hold the same, as of his Majesty's castle of Athlone, by knight's service.

During the Civil Wars, the Dolphins, in common with most of the Roman Catholic families in Connaught, sustained great losses by confiscations and forfeitures, which caused many members of the family to emigrate; however,

HUBERT DOLPHIN, living at Goulbilly in 1601, preferred remaining in his native country, in the hope of preserving some of their property; he m. 1st, Sarah-M. Burke, of Derryhoyle, by whom he had,

NOTE

I insert on the following page the pedigree of Gospatric and the Dunbars, with many thanks to the gallant Dunbar to whom I owe the greater part thereof. It illustrates that connection so much the course of the Northland and of England which influenced so much the course of the Norman Conquest. The singular name Gospatric, or Cospatric, is, it should be remembered, remarkable, as perhaps the earliest instance of an hereditary name. I am sorry to say that Scottish antiquaries can as yet throw no light on its etymology.
