PART I.

MEMORIAL OF MR. EDMOND FREEMAN OF SANDWICH, AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

REGRETTING the absence of definite, positive, and reliable information in regard to the place of nativity of our Ancestor, or the precise date of his birth, we can only gather such facts as remain, and submit them to the reader. Family tradition has it that "he came from Devonshire." There are circumstances indicating that he came "from Oxford." He was born, as is supposed, in the year 1590.

Touching the future of his life, we are in no uncertainty. He came from England in the year 1635, in "the ship 'Abigail,' Richard Hackwell master." The loading of the ship was begun in May; and, "after considerable delay," "The Abigail" "sailed from London," arrived safely in this country, and "with her came many passengers."

It has been truly remarked, that "the ten years between 1630 and 1640 witnessed by far the greater part of the early emigration to New England." It was so multitudinous, and so marked by one character, that the jealousy of the parent government was alarmed; and in 1634, just previous to the contemplated arrangements of our Ancestor for his departure, Laud, Neile, and others were appointed Commissioners of Colonies with both civil and ecclesiastical authority. Emigration was impeded, and much embarrassment occasioned, by a requirement that no one embark without a certificate of conformity to be furnished by the minister of the parish to which the applicant belonged. The emigrant ships were in consequence sometimes delayed. The interests of trade alone prevented the execution of prohibitory measures with unexceptional and continuous effect. In fact, after a while the hostility to emigration was found so futile, that it scarcely checked, and at last, perhaps, even aided, the progress of expatriation; so that before 1640 New England probably contained not less than ten thousand English inhabitants. It has been said, no doubt correctly, of those generally "who left England for the New World in the West" from 1620 to 1660, that "they were stanch supporters of the rights of the people, and with them departed the very heart of England's manhood."

The delays to which the ship in which our ancestor came over was subjected will be found indicated by the fact, that, although the vessel commenced loading in May, certificates were secured by those who intended to embark in her, at different periods of considerable interval. Among others, were the following bearing the name of FREEMAN; viz.: In a certificate bearing date, "July 1, 1635," are the names of "Elizabeth Freeman, æ. 12 yrs.; Alice Freeman, æ. 17 yrs.; Edmund Freeman, æ. 15 yrs.; and John Freeman, æ. 8 yrs." "Edward Freeman, husbandman, æ. 34," and "Elizabeth Freeman, uxor, æ. 35," are in another certificate of the same date. Previously, "June 17," certificates were furnished embracing "Marie Freeman, æ. 50; Jo: Freeman, æ. 9; Sycillæ Freeman, æ. 4." The admiralty register also, after an interval, reports: "John Freeman, æ. 35; Thomas Freeman, æ. 24;" and "Edmund Freeman, æ. 45." The last named, we suppose is our ancestor; the four first mentioned, viz., Elizabeth, Alice, Edmund, and John, being his children. The lists of early passengers to New England, as they appear in the admiralty office, further show that "Anthony Freeman, æ. 22," received a certificate, "Sept. 4, 1635, to embark in the ship 'Hopewell.'"

Whether all whose names are on the lists embarked, and actually came over, we are not able to determine; we can only trace with a probability approximating to certainty, besides those already mentioned as constituting the immedi-

Benjamin Freeman is frequently mentioned in First-Days Meetings. He was an apothecary in Westminster. He was frequently fined for attending meetings and preaching.
