A Clean Story (from the Civil War)

During the Civil War, Hiram and George Applegate were Union soldiers from the State of Indiana. They were both married and had little children. Their wives lived in Indianapolis while they were gone. When the men came home on leave, they found a wash tub (set out for them) "away from the house." They scrubbed themselves with lye soap and put on clean clothes before going to see their families. That way they protected their loved ones from any unwelcome guests (in the form of disease-carrying parasites).

George Applegate was an Army courier. He carried the word of Lincoln's assassination from Baton Rouge to New Orleans.
