Dowell's Chapel Cemetery

(aka Battle Axe)
2001 inventory,
Jackson Co., Arkansas

inventoried by Mark Williamson in visits from 12 Oct 2001 - 13 Nov 2001
<mwillia3@midsouth.rr.com>

DIRECTIONS: Take Arkansas Highway 145 north from Tuckerman until the pavement ends. At that point, take a left (onto Decker Store Road) and travel west for about 1 1/2 miles. The road will veer slightly to the left at that point (Centerville Cemetery is at that juncture) and then fork into roads going south and west. Stay on the road going south (Jackson Road 69) and travel 1 mile. Dowell's Chapel Cemetery will be clearly visible on the right-hand side.

I have made every effort to represent dates and inscriptions exactly as they appear on the tombstones. My comments are enclosed inside brackets []. Birthdates and other vital information of those individuals suspected to be living have been removed from this inventory, as well as lists of children and grandchildren. “{” signifies that this name is one of multiple names on a single tombstone. “/” signifies the beginning of a new line (used with military markers.)

An access road runs through the center of most of the cemetery before veering right (see representation at left.) The first part of this inventory is of the tombstones on the south and west sides of the access road (general positions marked by x at the left.) The graves are read in row order south to north, then east to west. The row numbers are created for personal reference only, and do not represent a plot layout of the cemetery.

The second part of this inventory consists of the tombstones found north of the access road that runs through the center of the cemetery (see left general positions of these stones are again marked by x.) The graves are read in row order south to north, then east to west. The row numbers are created for personal reference only, and do not represent a plot layout of the cemetery.
