The Cemeteries of Warrick County, Indiana

There are over 200 names for cemeteries in Warrick County but there are less than that number of actual cemeteries. Some of the cemeteries are known by more than one name, some have been moved and incorporated into other cemeteries, and others have just disappeared over the years. One of the main reasons was the coal mine operations in the county. The mines had the choice of moving the cemetery or providing access to it and mining around, and they did both over the years. As recently as 1990 cemeteries have been moved because they were in the way of progress. The Epworth cemetery that was located at the corner of Epworth Road and Highway 662 in Newburgh is now the site of a car wash. Those remains were moved to Rose Hill Cemetery just north of Newburgh on Highway 261.

There are family cemeteries that contained as few as just a single burial and other family cemeteries that are still being used today. A lot of these family plots have been subject to neglect and can no longer be found. Private ownership of the property that contained a cemetery has also had various actions on these grave yards. Several of them are well taken care of and can be seen to be in the back yard of the property owner. Others are not preserved but have not been bothered by the present owner. In one instance of a cemetery where I have some ancestors buried the cemetery was located in a field. The present owner of the land got tired of farming around the cemetery so he removed the stones and plowed over the graves.

The many small churches that once dotted the Warrick County landscape often had their own cemetery. Most of these churches and ground were sold to coal mines and the churches were torn down, but the cemeteries were left. The expense of moving some of the larger cemeteries was considered too great and the coal mine company provided roads to them and mined around.

Working with the help of the Warrick County Surveyor's office in 1997, I came up with over 200 cemetery names and locations. This was checked against two other works previously done. When finished, I gave a copy to the surveyor and it was used to make their own list and map. The surveyor's list has left out all but the proved existing cemeteries and also provided GPS locations. The list below is the names and township location of the cemeteries of Warrick County.
