

ABOUT KENTUCKY MARRIAGES

To get married in early Kentucky required at least three records be entered at the County Clerk's office. These were the marriage bond, the license and the minister's return.

THE MARRIAGE BOND -- To obtain a marriage bond required the signatures of two persons. A bond was a statement that both of the persons proposing to be married were legally free to be married. The bondsmen were frequently a close relative. In all cases, it was someone who had known the groom or bride for a period of time previously. Sometimes the groom signed the bond for himself.

THE MARRIAGE LICENSE -- The next step was to obtain a marriage license. This was usually done at the same time as the bond, but not necessarily. The couple both had to be present to obtain a license. If either party was under the age of 21, the consent of a parent or guardian was required. For persons who were over 21 years of age, a consent was not required. At this point, the couple were free to take their license to a Justice of the Peace or a Minister and be married.

THE MARRIAGE RETURN -- Actually the marriage return is the only proof that a marriage took place. It is a statement by the person who performed the ceremony that the marriage actually took place and that they are now man and wife.

The ideal situation is that the bond and the license were obtained in the same courthouse at the same time, and the couple were married that same day and the return was properly made to that same courthouse. The other extreme is that the groom and the bride's father obtained the bond while they were getting the family's food in one county seat and the couple went to another county seat to get the license because the circuit rider minister was coming to their church the next Sunday. After marrying a few couples on that Sunday, the minister went on to the next church on his circuit. The next time he was in a County Clerk's office in a county 100 miles away, he tried to remember everyone that he had married in the last three months and file all the returns. "Let's see, what was that young girl's name?" Therefore, all of the documents to support a given marriage may be spread over three counties. The return is the least likely to be on record of the three documents.

Discrepancies occur everywhere. One county only recorded the groom's name as he was the one paying for the license. The bride's names were never given. Missing names and dates are common.

Our books are basically indexes to these marriage records. They are usually taken from the bonds. The second source would be the licenses. We also search out old transcripts of marriages for these counties to include those records that were present at one time but have subsequently disappeared. My own great-great grandfather was married in 1821 in Henry County according to a transcription made in 1931. Fortunately, there is also a separate index to the Marriage License Book in Henry County. It does list the name of the groom and give a page number. But today, that page has been torn from the book, the bond is missing, the bride's consent is missing and there is no evidence that there was a return. In days prior to copying machines, it was not uncommon for a genealogist to take the actual document with them when they visited the courthouse.

IN KENTUCKY TODAY -- The State of Kentucky is making a great effort to preserve their historical records. They have built a fireproof building in Frankfort, known as The Kentucky Archives. All Kentucky courthouse records were microfilmed during the mid 1970's. Upon completion, ALL of the records were supposed to be sent to the Archives for permanent storage. Still not all of the counties complied with this order. The actual documents are no longer available for public use but copies of the microfilms were made available in the county, either in the Clerk's office or in the county library. A complete set of all of the microfilms are available in the Reading Room of the Archives in Frankfort. However, this causes some misunderstanding when writing to a county in Kentucky regarding a marriage record. Many people have received a notice stating "That record is not in this county" which causes them to think that a search was actually done and the marriage did not occur in that county. This is more likely to mean that all of their records have been sent to Frankfort and there are NO records still in the county. So it doesn't mean that the marriage book is wrong. It simply means that they do not have ANY old records in that office.

The most reliable place to obtain any Kentucky Courthouse record is from the microfilms in the Archives. The Archives does not have a research staff. If you cannot visit the Archives personally, seek out a Researcher who will do the research for you. The Archives should have a list of Researchers. "The Genealogical Helper" has a Directory of Researchers annually for individual counties and also state-wide. The Micrographics Department of the Kentucky Archives also sells the rolls of microfilm by mail. I do not know of any current microfilm rental program for the Kentucky record. Telephone the Micrographics Division, Kentucky State Archives, Frankfort, KY, for current prices and availability.

ONE MORE NOTE -- In the script of the 1800's, two sets of letters were completely interchangeable. The capital "J" and "I" were both written as we write the capital "I" today, and the capital "L" and "S" were both written as we would write a capital "S" today. In transcribing records, there is no way to know for sure which letter was intended.

We hope that these notes will help you in your searching.
