SPEAR. "Mr. Lemuel Spear, of Macedon, committed suicide by hanging himself, on Thursday morning. It appears that there had been a protracted meeting [a religious revival] in session near where the deceased resided; he attended, got his feelings excited, and his brain bewildered, by listening to ... dark and gloomy pictures of the future, which probably caused him to commit the horrid deed. We come to this conclusion from the fact that about four years since, there was a similar meeting in the same town, Mr. Spear attended, and it had a similar effect upon him at that time. He became wild, and remained in a state of mental derangement for several weeks; his family were obliged to watch him; they feared he would then commit suicide; but the excitement passed off after a while, and he became in possession of his reason again. He was never, during his life, suspected of being in the least insane, with the exception of these two cases; but always bore the character of being possessed of strong mind and most excellent judgment."
