SOMETIMES MINE (Lawrence County, Carbonate District, silver) originally located as the "Summer Snow" and later abandoned, was relocated May 9, 1895, by Frank S. Bryant and Michael Katen. Bryant was a firm believer in the law of averages and thought that if he made enough locations, he would eventually make a valuable strike. His theory proved itself, because he located some claims that later proved of real value. Because he sometimes "hit" and sometimes did not, he named this particular claim the "Sometimes." But this was one time when he did not hit it lucky. From South Dakota Place-Names A South Dakota Writers' Project Book

FRENCH CREEK (Custer County to Cheyenne River) bears a name of disputed origin. (1) It was so named because a group of Frenchmen located claims around its headquarters shortly after gold was discovered in the Hills, and the remains of their cabins were in existence up to within a few years ago. (1940) (2) It derived its name from the fact that it became identified at an early day with certain French trappers or explorers. In view of the fact that gold was not discovered in the Hills until 1874 and the name "French Creek" appears on Lieutenant Warren's map of 1857, it would seem that the former theory is untenable, and that the latter is probably the correct one.
