

GALLIA.

Gallia was formed from Washington, April 30th, 1803. The word Gallia is the ancient name of France, from whence it was originally settled. The surface is generally broken, excepting in the eastern part and on the Ohio river and Kiger creek, where it is more level, and the soil fertile. Much of the county is well adapted to wheat, and a great part covered with a sandy loam. The principal crops are corn, wheat, oats and beans. The following is a list of its townships, in 1840, with their population.

The population of the county was, in 1820, 7098; in 1830, 9733, and in 1840, 13,445, or 25 inhabitants to a square mile.

The first settlement in the county was at Gallipolis. It was settled in 1791, by a French colony, sent out under the auspices of "the Scioto company." This company was in some way connected with the Ohio company. What that connection was, does not fully appear.* Col. Duer, of New York, "secretary to the board of treasury," a Mr. Flint and a Mr. Craig seem to have been the most prominent members of the company.

In May or June, 1788, Joel Barlow, the agent of the company, left this country for Europe. He distributed proposals† at Paris, from which the annexed is an extract.

A climate wholesome and delightful, frost even in winter almost entirely unknown, and a river called, by way of eminence, the beautiful, and abounding in excellent fish of a vast size. Noble forests, consisting of trees that spontaneously produce sugar, (the sugar maple;) and a plant that yields ready-made candles, (myrica cerifera;) Vension in plenty, the pursuit of which is uninterrupted by wolves, foxes, lions or tigers. A couple of swine will multiply themselves a hundred fold in two or three years, without taking any care of them. No taxes to pay, no military services to be performed.

Volney, who came to America in 1795, in his "View," where we find the above, says:

* Volney speaks of the Ohio company as being the original proprietors, and the Scioto as purchasers from them. Judge Hall, in his Statistics of the West, says the Scioto company, which was formed from or by the Ohio company, as a subordinate. Barlow, he says, was sent to Europe by the Ohio company—which fact the biographical sketch of Barlow also states—and by them the lands in question were conveyed to the Scioto company. Kibbourn's gazetteer says: "the Scioto company, which intended to buy of congress all the tract between the western boundary of the Ohio company's purchase and the Scioto, directed the French settlers to Gallipolis, supposing it to be west of the Ohio company's purchase, though it proved not to be." The company, he adds, failing to make their payments, the whole of the proposed purchase remained with government.—Annals of the West.

† Volney states that these proposals were distributed in 1790.

These munificent promoters forgot to say, that these forests must be cut down before corn could be raised; that for a year, at least, they must bring their daily bread from a great distance; that hunting and fishing are agreeable amusements, when pursued for the sake of amusement, but are widely different when followed for the sake of subsistence: and they quite forgot to mention, that though there be no bears or tigers in the neighborhood, there are wild beasts infinitely more cunning and ferocious, in the shape of men, who were at that time at open and cruel war with the whites.

In truth, the market value of these lands at that time, in America, was no more than six or seven cents an acre. In France, in Paris, the imagination was too heated to admit of doubt or suspicion, and people were too ignorant and uninformed to perceive where the picture was defective, and its colors too glaring. The example, too, of the wealthy and reputedly wise confirmed the popular delusion. Nothing was talked of, in every social circle, but the paradise that was opened for Frenchmen in the western wilderness; the free and happy life to be led on the blissful banks of the Scioto. At length, Brissot published his travels,* and completed the flattering delusion: buyers became numerous and importunate, chiefly among the better sort of the middle class: single persons and whole families disposed of their all, flattering themselves with having made excellent bargains.

With the proposals, a map was shown at Paris by the agents of the Scioto company, Joel Barlow, from the United States, an Englishman by the name of Playfair, and a Frenchman, named De Saïsson. An impression of this map is in the possession of Mons. J. P. R. Bureau, of Gallipolis, one of the original settlers. From it the annexed engraving was taken, omitting some non-essentials. The original is sixteen inches long and twelve wide.

It is in French, handsomely engraved and colored, with the lands of the two companies and the tract east of them, all divided into townships of six miles square. It represents the Scioto company's tract as extending about one hundred miles north of the mouth of the Kanawha, and including more or less of the present counties of Meigs, Athens, Muskingum, Licking, Franklin, Pickaway, Ross, Pike, Scioto, Gallia, Lawrence, Perry, Jackson, Hocking, and Fairfield. This tract, on the map, is divided into 142 townships and 32 fractions. The north line of the Ohio land company's tract is 18 miles south of the other, and included the present county of Morgan, and parts of Washington, Meigs, Athens, Muskingum, Guernsey and Monroe, there divided into 91 townships and 16 fractions. The tract east of that of the Ohio company, extends 48 miles farther north. Upon the original, are the words "Sept rangs de municipalite acquis par des individus et occupes depuis, 1786;"

* Volney here refers to the travels of Brissot de Warville. Brissot published several volumes relating to America, as we infer from his preface to his "New Travels in America;" a work issued in the spring of 1791, and consisting in part of a series of letters written from this country, in 1788. In his preface to the last, he says: "the third volume was published in 1787, by Mr. Claviere and me." In the last, he refers to the charges against the Scioto company, in this wise. "This company has been much calumniated. It has been accused of selling lands which it does not possess, of giving exaggerated accounts of its fertility, of deceiving the emigrants, of robbing France of her inhabitants, and of sending them to be butchered by the savages. But the title of this association is incontestable; the proprietors are reputable men: the description which they have given of the lands is taken from the public and authentic reports of Mr. Hutchins, geographer of congress. No person can dispute their prodigious fertility." He elsewhere speaks, in this volume, in high terms of the company.

"Plan of the Purchase of the Ohio and Scioto Land Companies."

The map is inaccurate in its geography, and fraudulent in its statements. It represents the country as "cleared and inhabited," when it was a wilderness, the only settlement being at Marietta, with perhaps some offshoots from it on the Ohio and Muskingum.

The glowing representations made by the agents of the company, were well-timed for their enterprise. It was about the beginning of the French revolution, and the "flattering delusion" took strong hold The terms to induce emigration, were as follows: the company proposed to take the emigrant to their lands and pay the cost, and the latter bound himself to work three years for the company, for which he was to receive fifty acres, a house and a cow.* Printed deeds, executed at Paris, with all due formality, were given to some of the purchasers, by Playfair and De Saisson. About five hundred Frenchmen left their native country, landed mostly at Alexandria, and made their way to the promised land. They were persons ill fitted for such an enterprise. Among them were not a few carvers and gilders to his majesty, coach and peruke makers, friseurs and other artistes, about equally well fitted for a backwoods life, with only ten or twelve farmers and laborers.

On the map is shown the "first town," i. e. "Premiere Ville," lying opposite the mouth of the Kanawha. It was laid out by the Ohio company, under the name of Fair Haven; but as the ground there is low and liable to overflow, Gallipolis was located four miles below, upon a high bank, ten feet above the flood of 1832.†

This location was made just before the arrival of the French. Col. Rufus Putnam sent Major Burnham, with about forty men, for that purpose, who made the clearing and erected block-houses and cabins. Col. Robert Safford, now living near Gallipolis, was of this party, and cut the first tree. From his description, we give the view of the place at that time, the greater part of which stood on the site of the public square.

On the public square stood 80 log cabins, 20 in each row. At each of the corners were block-houses, two stories in height. In front of the cabins, close by the river bank, was a small log breast-work, erected for a defence while building the cabins. Above the cabins on the square, were two other parallel rows of cabins, which, with a high stockade fence and block-houses at each of the upper corners, formed a sufficient fortification in times of danger. These upper cabins were a story and a half in height, built of hewed logs, and finished in better style than those below, being intended for the richer class. In the upper cabins was a room used for a council chamber and a ball room.

The Seneca company contracted with Putnam to erect these buildings and furnish the settlers with provisions; but failed of payment, by which he lost a large amount.

We continue the history of Gallipolis, in the annexed extract from a communication in the Pioneer, by Waldeurard Meulette, one of the colonists.

At an early meeting of the colonists, the town was named Gallipolis, (town of the Gauls). I did not arrive till nearly all the colonists were there. I descended the river in 1791, in flat boats, loaded with troops, commanded by Gen. St. Clair, destined for an expedition against the Indians. Some of my countrymen joined that expedition; among others was Grand Malarte, a captain in the French guard of Louis XVI. General St. Clair made him one of his a-dé-camps in the battle, in which he was severely wounded. He went back to Philadelphia, from whence he returned to France. The Indians were encouraged to greater depredations and murders, by their success in this expedition, but more especially against the American settlements. From their intercourse with the French in Canada, at some other cause, they seemed less disposed to trouble us. Immediately after St. Clair's defeat, Col. Sproat, commandant at Marietta, appointed four spies for Virginia—one American and two French, of which I was one, and it was not until after he was at Coveville, in 1795, that we were released.

Notwithstanding the great difficulties, the difference of tempers, education and professions, the inhabitants lived in harmony, and having little or nothing to do, made themselves agreeable and useful to each other. The Americans and hunters, employed by the company, performed the first labors of clearing the township, which was divided into lots.

Although the French were willing to work, yet the clearing of an American wilderness was no easy matter, was far more than they could perform. To migrate from the eastern side to the "far west," is painful enough now-a-days, but how much more so it must be to a citizen of a large European town! even a farmer of the old countries would find it very hard, if not impossible, to clear land in the wilderness. Those hunters were paid by the company to prepare their garden ground, which was to receive the seeds brought from France; we at the colonists knew how to make a garden, but they were guided by a few hints on that subject, which they had brought likewise from France. The colony then began to improve in its appearance and comfort. The fresh provisions were supplied by the company's hunters, the others came from their magazines. When, of the expeditions of General St. Clair and Wayne, many of the troops stopped at Gallipolis to take provisions, which had been deposited there for that purpose by government; the Indians, who to their great shame came there in the night, at last saw the regulars going morning and evening past the town in order to ascertain if there were any Indian traces, and attacked them, killing and wounding several—a soldier, besides other wounds, was tomahawked, and captured. A French colonist, who had tried to raise corn at some distance from the company, or Indian hearing from behind some brushwood against a tree, shot him in the back, and made a part of it; and sometime afterward a Frenchman was killed, and a man and woman were captured, as they were going to collect ashes to make soap, at some distance from the town.

After the arrival of the Indians continued depredations on the Americans on both sides of the river, the French had suffered only by the loss of some cattle carried away, until the arrival of the Seneca company. The Seneca company, in the mean time, had nearly all the land cleared, and the crops raised, after which time they ceased their supply of provisions, and were succeeded by one or two of their agents in France, who, having received the money for the provisions, had kept the money for themselves and run off with a large sum, without having purchased or possessing any of the tract which the had sold to the deceived colonists. This intelligence exasperated them, and was the more sensibly felt, as a scarcity of provisions added to their disappointment. The winter was uncommonly severe; the creek and the Ohio were frozen; the hunters had no longer any meat to sell; flat boats could not come down with flour to furnish as they had done before. This produced almost a famine in the settlement, and a family of eight persons, father, mother and children, was obliged to subsist for eight or ten days on dry beans, boiled in water, without either salt, grease or bread, and those had never known, before that time, what it was to want for any thing. On the other hand, the dangers from the Indians seemed to augment every day.

The colonists were by this time weary of being confined to a few acres of land; their industry and their labor was lost; the money and clothes which they had brought were nearly gone. They knew not to whom they were to apply to get their lands; they hoped that if Wayne's campaign forced the Indians to make a lasting peace, the Scioto company would send immediately, either to recover or to purchase those promised lands; but they soon found out their mistake. After the treaty of Greenville, many Indians passing through Gallipolis, on their way to the seat of government, and several travellers, revealed the whole transaction, from which it was ascertained that the pretended Scioto company was composed of New Englanders, the names of very few only being known to the French, who, being themselves ignorant of the English language, and at such a distance from the place of residence of their defrauders, and without means for prosecuting them, could get no redress. Far in a distant land, separated forever from their friends and relations—with exhausted means, was it surprising that they were disheartened, and that every social tie should have been loosened, nearly broken, and a great portion of the deceived colonists should have become reckless? May the happy of this day, never feel as they did, when all hope was blasted, and they were left so destitute! Many of the colonists went off and settled elsewhere with the means that remained to them, and resumed their trades in more populous parts of the country; others led a half-savage life, as hunters for skins: the greater part, however, resolved, in a general assembly, to make a memorial of their grievances, and send it to congress. The memorial claimed no rights from that body, but it was a detail of their wrongs and sufferings, together with an appeal to the generosity and feelings of congress; and they did not appeal in vain. One of the colonists proposed to carry the petition; he only stipulated that his expenses should be paid by a contribution of the colonists, whether he succeeded or not in their object; but, he added, that if he obtained for himself the quantity of land which he had paid for, and the rest had none, he should be repaid by their gratitude for his efforts.* At Philadelphia, he met with a French lawyer, M. Duponceau, and through his means he obtained from congress a grant of 24,000 acres of land, known by the name of the French grant, opposite to Little Sandy, for the French, who were still resident at Gallipolis. The act annexed the condition of settling on the lands three years before reviewing the deed of gift. The bearer of the petition had his 4000 acres; the rest was divided among the remaining French, amounting to ninety-two persons, married and single.

Each inhabitant had thus a lot of 257½ acres of land; but before the surveys and other arrangements could be made, some time was necessary, during which, those who had reclaimed the wilderness and improved Gallipolis being reluctant to lose all their labor, and finding that a company, owning the lands of Marietta, and where there was a settlement previous to that of the French colony, had met to divide lands which they had purchased in a common stock, the colonists sent a deputation for the purpose of proposing to the company to sell them the spot where Gallipolis was and is situated, and to be paid in proportion to what was improved, which was accepted. When at last the distribution of the lots of the French grant was achieved, some sold their share, others went to settle on it, or put tenants, and either remained at Gallipolis, or went elsewhere; but how few entered again heartily into a new kind of life, after having lost many of their lives and much of their health, amid hardships, excess of labor, or the indolence which follows discouragement and hopeless efforts! Few of the original settlers remain at Gallipolis: not many at the French grant.

Breckenridge, in his Recollections, gives some reminiscences of Gallipolis, related in a style of charming simplicity and humor. He was at Gallipolis in 1795, at which time he was a boy of nine years of age.

* Our contributor is not clear here: we presume he meant to say: "But he added, that if he obtained as much, he would expect for himself the quantity of land he had paid for, viz: 4000 acres; and if the rest who had no land got some, he would be repaid by their gratitude for his efforts."—Ed.

Should he ever more in part, and domiciliated at the house, or the inn, of Monsieur, or woman, Dr. Saugrain, a cheerful, sprightly little Frenchman, four feet six, English measure, and a cheerful, natural philosopher and physician, both in the English and French signification of the word. This singular village was settled by people from France and Lyons, chiefly artists and trades, peculiarly unfitted to sit down in the wilderness and clear away forests. I have seen half a dozen at work in taking down a tree, some pulling ropes fastened to the trunk, while others were cutting around it like beavers. Some of these serious accidents result, in consequence of their awkwardness. Their former employment had been only calculated to administer to the luxury of highly polished and wealthy societies. There were carvers and gilders to the king, coach makers, freizers and watch makers, and a variety of others who might have found some employment in our large towns, but who were entirely out of their place in the wilds of Ohio. Their means in this time had been exhausted, and they were beginning to suffer from the want of the necessaries, and even the conveniences of life. The country back from the river was still a wilderness, and the Gallipolians did not pretend to cultivate any thing more than small garden spots, depending for their supply of provisions, on the boats which now began to descend the river, but they had to pay in cash and that was become scarce. They still assembled at the ball-room twice a week; it was evident, however, that they felt disappointed, and were no longer happy. The predilections of the best among them, being on the side of the Bourbons, the horrors of the French revolution, even in their remote situation, mingled with their private misfortunes, which had at this time nearly reached their apex, in consequence of the discovery that they had no title to their lands, having been merely allowed to use them from whom they had purchased. It is well known that congress purchased nearly half a million of acres of land, from which, however, but few of them ever derived any advantage.

As the time was now more frequented, the house was occasionally resorted to, and repaired by parties looking out for food to purchase. The doctor had a small apartment which contained his common apartments, and I used to sit by him, as often as I could witness the curious operation of his blow-pipe and crucible. I loved the cheerful little man, and he became very fond of me in return. Many of my countrymen used to come and stare at his things, which they were half inclined to think, had a too near resemblance to the black art. The doctor's little phosphoric matches, ignising spontaneously when the glass tube was broken, and from which he derived some emolument, were thought by some to be rather beyond mere human power. His barometer and thermometer, with the case neatly painted with the pearl and the frames richly carved, were objects of wonder, and probably some of them are yet extant in the west. But what most astonished some of our visitors, was a large perch in a glass bottle, the neck of which would only admit a common cork, this was accomplished by tying the bottle to the limb of a tree, with the string when pulled inserted into it. His swans which swam around basins of water struck me more than any wonders exhibited by the wonderful man.

The doctor was a great favorite with the Americans, as well for his vivacity and sweetness of temper, which nothing could sour, as on account of a circumstance which gave him high credit as a warrior of the back woodsmen. He had shown himself, notwithstanding his small size and great good nature, a very hero in combat with the Indians. He had descended into the country with two French philosophers, who were believers in the primitive innocence and goodness of the children of the forest. They could not be persuaded, that the savage state is distinguished from the Indians; as they had no intentions to injure the people, they supposed by them could be meditated on their part. Dr. Saugrain was not at all deceived by their good intentions, and accordingly kept his pistols close by him. The philosophers invited them on board a canoe with a party of warriors approached the boat, the philosophers invited them on board by signs, when they came rather too willingly. The doctor, who had on coming on board of the boat, was to salute the two philosophers with his bow, and they would have treated the doctor in the same way, had he not been so well provided with good effect—killed two of the savages, and then leaped into the water, and in the flash of the guns of the others, and succeeded in wounding several of the savages whose wounds were conspicuous.

The doctor was married to an amiable young woman, but not possessing as much vivacity and spirit as her husband. She had no maid to assist her, her brother, a boy of my age, and myself were her usual helps in the kitchen. We brought water and wood, and carried the doctor's boat to ground in the morning about two miles for a little milk, sometimes on the frozen ground, barefooted. I tried a pair of savots, or wooden shoes but was unable to make any use of them, although they had been made by the carver to the king. Little perquisites, too, sometimes fell to our share from blacking boots and shoes; my companion generally saved his, while mine would have burned a hole in my pocket, if it had remained there. In the spring and summer, a good deal of my time was passed in the garden, weeding the beds. While thus engaged, I formed an acquaintance with a young lady, of eighteen or twenty, on the other side of the palings, who was often similarly occupied. Our friendship, which was purely Platonic, commenced with the story of Blue Beard, recounted by her, and with the novelty and pathos of which I was much interested. This incident may perhaps remind the reader of the story of Pyramus and Thisbe, or perhaps of the hortical eclogue of Dean Swift, "Dermot and Sheila."

Connected with this lady, is an incident which I feel a pleasure in relating. One day while standing alone on the bank of the river, I saw a man who had gone in to bathe, and who had got beyond his depth, without being able to swim. He had begun to struggle for life, and in a few seconds would have sunk to rise no more. I shot down the bank like an arrow, leaped into a canoe, which fortunately happened to be close by, pushed the end to him, and as he rose, perhaps for the last time, he seized it with a deadly convulsive grasp, and held so firmly that the skin afterward came off the parts of his arms which pressed against the wood. I screamed for help; several persons came and took him out, perfectly insensible. He afterwards married the young lady, and raised a numerous and respectable family. One of his daughters married a young lawyer, who now represents that district in congress.

Toward the latter part of summer, the inhabitants suffered severely from sickness and want of provisions. Their situation was truly wretched. The swamp in the rear, now exposed by the clearing between it and the river, became the cause of a frightful epidemic, from which few escaped, and many became its victims. I had recovered from the ague, and was among the few exempted from the disease: but our family, as well as the rest, suffered much from absolute hunger, a most painful sensation, as I had before experienced. To show the extremity of our distress, on one occasion the brother of Madame Saugrain and myself pushed a light canoe to an island above town, where we pulled some corn, took it to mill, and excepting some of the raw grains, had nothing to eat from the day before, until we carried home the flour and made some bread, but had neither milk nor meat. I have learned to be thankful when I had a sufficiency of wholesome food, however plain, and was blessed with health; and I could put up with humble fare, without a murmur, although accustomed to luxuries, when I have seen those who have never experienced absolute starvation, turn up their noses at that, which was a very little worse than the best they had ever known.

I had been nearly a year at Gallipolis, when Capt. Smith, of the United States army came along in advance of the barge of Gen. Wilkinson, and according to the request of my father, took me into his custody, for the purpose of bringing me once more to my native place. He remained two or three days waiting for the general, and in the meanwhile procured me hat, shoes and clothes befitting a gentleman's son, and then took me on board his boat. Shortly after the general overtook us, I was transferred on board his barge, as a playmate for his son Biddle, a boy of my own age. The general's lady, and several ladies and gentlemen, were on board his boat, which was fitted up in a style of convenience, and even magnificence, scarcely surpassed even by the present steamboats. It was propelled against the stream by twenty-five or thirty men, sometimes by the pole, the cordelle, and often by the oar. There was also a band of musicians on board, and the whole had the appearance of a mere party of pleasure. My senses were overpowered—it seemed an Elysium! The splendor of the furniture—the elegance of the dresses—and then, the luxuries of the table, to a half-starved creature like me, produced an effect which can scarce be easily described. Every repast was a royal banquet, and such delicacies were placed before me, as I had never seen before, and in sufficient abundance to satiate my insatiable appetite. I was no more like what I had been, than the cast-off skin of the black snake resembles the new dress in which he glitters in the sunbeam. The general's countenance was continually lighted up with smiles, and he seemed faire le bonheur, of all around him.—it seemed his business to make every one happy about him. His countenance and manners were such as I have rarely seen, and now that I can form a more just estimate of them, were such as better fitted him for a court than a republic. His lady was truly an estimable person, of the mildest and softest manners. She gave her son and myself a reproach one day, which I never forgot. She saw us catching minnows with pin-hooks, made us desist, and then explained in the sweetest manner, the cruelty of taking away life wantonly from the humblest thing in creation.

HIGH STREET, COLUMBUS.

In 1807, Breckenridge again saw Gallipolis.

As we passed Point Pleasant and the island below it, Gallipolis, which I looked for with anxious feelings, hove in sight. I thought of the French inhabitants—I thought of my friend Saugrain; and I recalled, in the liveliest colors, the incidents of that portion of my life which was passed here. A year is a long time at that period—every day is crowded with new and great and striking events. When the boat landed, I ran up the bank and looked around; but ah! how changed! The Americans had taken the town in hand, and no trace of antiquity, that is, of twelve years ago, remained. I hastened to the spot where I expected to find the shade, the little log house, tavern and laboratory of the doctor, but they had vanished like the palace of Abaddin. After some inquiry, I found a little Frenchman, who, like the old woman of Gabelmuth's village, was "the end historian of the deserted place,"—that is, deserted by one race, to be peopled by another. He led me to where a few logs might be seen, as the only remains of the once happy tenement which had sheltered me; but all around it was a common; the town had taken a different direction. My heart sickened; the picture which my imagination had drawn—the scenes which my memory loved to cherish, were blotted out and obliterated. A volume of reminiscences seemed to be annihilated in an instant! I took a hasty glance at the new town, as I returned to the boat. I saw brick houses, painted frames, fanciful enclosures, ornamental trees! Even the pond, which had carried off a third of the French population by its malaria, had disappeared, and a pretty green had usurped its place, with a neat brick court house in the midst of it. This was too much; I hastened my pace, and with sorrow, once more pushed into the stream.

Public Square, Gallipolis.

Gallipolis, the county seat, is pleasantly situated on the Ohio river, 102 miles southeasterly from Columbus. It contains 1 Presbyterian, 1 Episcopal and 1 Methodist church, 12 or 14 stores, 2 newspaper printing offices, and by the census of 1840, had 1,221 inhabitants, and now has about 1700. A part of the population is of French descent, but they have in a great measure lost their national characteristics. Some few of the original French settlers are yet living. The engraving of the public square, shows the market and court house near the center of the view, with a glimpse of the Ohio river on the left.

The failure of the Gallipolis bank, at this place, a few years since, excited a strong sensation throughout the state. The history of the institution we derive from the communication of one familiar with it.

The charter of the bank of Gallipolis, was passed in the year 1818, but the commissioners named in it, never judged it advisable to open books for subscription, until the spring of 1839, when they were opened at the solicitation of M. B. Sherwood, of Buffalo, he proposing, on behalf of the Erie County bank in that city, to subscribe to a large amount. Mr. Sherwood brought such strong testimonials of integrity of character, and ability to accomplish what he proposed, as to satisfy the commissioners, and he was permitted to subscribe for $200,000 of the stock, paying thereon $20,000, by a certificate of stock deposited in the Erie County bank; this certificate was paid at the time, to show that Mr. Sherwood was in earnest, in organizing the bank in good faith. He stated at the time, that those for whom he acted, were men of wealth—had established two banks in New York, the Staten Island and the Erie County banks, and were anxious to connect their business with a western bank, as it would much facilitate the transaction of their business, and prove of mutual advantage and profit to both institutions.

When the time came for putting the bank into operation, Mr. Sherwood was present with about $40,000 in specie and the paper of specie-paying banks; the bank was examined by a commissioner, Geo. House, appointed by the governor, Wilson Shannon, and authorized to do business as a bank by the governor's proclamation. The president, Mr. Smith, the cashier, Mr. Scovill, and Whiting, chief clerk, were also from Buffalo. The other directors were among the most respectable men of Gallipolis. The bank failed in January, 1841, when it became apparent, that a most stupendous system of fraud had been carried on by means of this bank and others, all under the management of the same band of swindlers, Sherwood, Cole and others.

The manner seems to have been this. The directors of the Gallipolis bank had procured bills to be struck by Rawdon, Wright & Hatch, of New York, engravers, to the amount of $175,000, and this was the entire amount of bills as was supposed by the resident directors; but it turns out that the president and cashier, under the direction of Sherwood, had in some way procured bills to be struck to the amount of some $1,200,000, without the knowledge of the other directors, and while the books and accounts were kept, and the circulation predicated upon bills to the amount of $175,000, Sherwood was scattering broad-cast over the land, this vast fraudulent circulation, unknown to the resident directors, until it was brought to light by the vast over-issue, coming in after the failure.

There were other banks with which the same company was connected, to wit, the Manhattan bank, in Lucas county, Ohio, the Circleville bank, at Circleville, Ohio, the West Union bank, at West Union, Ohio, and the Mineral Point bank, in Wisconsin. Sherwood seems to have operated largely in state stocks, paying for them in the paper of these fraudulent banks. When the explosion came, he and these banks were indebted to Illinois, near $100,000; to Indiana, about $600,000, besides an unredeemed circulation of these banks, of not less than from $300,000 to $400,000.

Before the failure of the bank in January, 1841, a Mr. Farrington appeared in Gallipolis, in October of 1840, where he remained until January following, when he presented a transfer of the stock belonging to Kinney & Smith, in whose names it stood for the use of the Erie County bank, as was stated, and became himself president of the bank, under representations, on his part, of his great wealth. During the months of October, November and December, 1840, several strangers, of the names of Hill, Weed and others, appeared in Gallipolis, talked largely of their wealth, proposed entering into business, but never went beyond talking; what their business was, no one knew. After the failure of the bank, it became apparent that these men were the associates of Farrington, and that their business at Gallipolis, had been to fill their pockets with the Gallipolis bank paper, and then to go off and pay it out for whatever they could obtain. They bought up property of every description at exorbitant prices, in order to swindle the community.

Farrington, Hill, Weed and some others, the men who had engaged in swindling in the fraudulent bank of Millington, in Maryland, seem to have purchased of Sherwood & Co., the chance of what could be made by means of the Gallipolis bank, before the explosion should take place. Hill, in a letter to Farrington, received after his arrest, states that Sherwood had cheated them, as he, Hill, was satisfied that there was a greater over-issue than had been represented.

At the time of the failure of the bank, Farrington was arrested, and, with Scovill, Whiting and some others, indicted, tried, convicted, and sent to the penitentiary for six years. Whiting was arrested at Lowell, in Massachusetts, brought to Gallipolis, and confined to await his trial; but with the aid of certain persons, he escaped, and has never since been retaken. Sherwood was compelled to run for Texas, to protect himself from justice.

The assets of the bank, at the time of the failure, were applied by the resident directors to the redemption of its liabilities, as far as they would go, having been handed over to those presenting claims against the bank, as fast as the claims were presented. The cir-capital advanced was very large, but no one can tell the amount. The whole affair was a stupendous scheme of swindling, as has ever been carried on in the country, and the whole resting upon the credit of two banks in New York, organized under the free banking law of that state, with stocks, which were probably borrowed of the states of Indiana and Illinois.

Gen. Edward W. Tupper, in July, 1812, raised for a six months' duty, a force of 1000 men, principally from this, Lawrence and Jackson counties. Daniel Womeldorf, of this county, commanded a company of cavalry. They marched to the northwest, and had a skirmish with the enemy at the foot of the Maumee rapids, with unimportant results. Gen. Tupper resided in Gallipolis, and died many years since. Capt. Womeldorf is living in the county.

The following are the names of small villages in this county, with their population, in 1840. Patriot 119, Wilkesville 119, Centerville 64, Porter 75, and Vinton 52. (See Addenda.)

GEAUGA.

GEAUGA was formed from Trumbull, in 1805, since which its original limits have been much reduced. In March, 1840, the county of Lake was mainly formed from its northern part. The name Geauga, or Sheauga, signifies, in the Indian language, raccoon: it was originally applied to Grand river; thus, "Sheauga sepe," i. e. Raccoon river. The surface is rolling and heavily timbered, and the soil generally clay. The principal exports are sheep, cattle, butter and cheese. The following is a list of its townships, in 1840, with their population.

The population of Geauga, in 1820, was 7791; in 1830, 15,813, and in 1840, 16,299, or 42 inhabitants to a square mile.

This county being at the head waters of Chagrin, Cuyahoga and part of Grand rivers, is high ground, and more subject to deep snows than any other part of the Reserve. It was formerly much subject to very high sweeping winds or tornadoes. In August, 1804, John Miner was killed at Chester. He had lately moved from Burton, with part of his family, into a log house which he had built at that place. A furious storm suddenly arose, and the timber commenced falling on all sides, when he directed his two children to go under the floor, and stepped to the door to see the falling timber: at that instant, three trees fell across the house and killed him instantly. The children remained in the house until the next morning, when

sioners named in it, never judged it advisable to open books for subscription, until the spring of 1839, when they were opened at the solicitation of M. B. Sherwood, of Buffalo, he proposing, on behalf of the Erie County bank in that city, to subscribe to a large amount. Mr. Sherwood brought such strong testimonials of integrity of character, and ability to accomplish what he proposed, as to satisfy the commissioners, and he was permitted to subscribe for $200,000 of the stock, paying thereon $20,000, by a certificate of stock deposited in the Erie County bank; this certificate was paid at the time, to show that Mr. Sherwood was in earnest, in organizing the bank in good faith. He stated at the time, that those for whom he acted, were men of wealth—and established two banks in New York, the Staten Island and the Erie County banks, and were anxious to connect their business with a western bank, as it would much facilitate the transaction of their business, and prove of mutual advantage and profit to both institutions.

When the time came for putting the bank into operation, Mr. Sherwood was present with about $40,000 in specie and the paper of specie-paying banks; the bank was examined by a commissioner, Geo. House, appointed by the governor, Wilson Shannon, and authorized to do business as a bank, by the governor's proclamation. The president, Mr. Smith, the cashier, Mr. Scovill, and Whiting, chief clerk, were also from Buffalo. The other directors were among the most respectable men of Gallipolis. The bank failed in January, 1841, when it became apparent, that a most stupendous system of fraud had been carried on by means of this bank and others, all under the management of the same band of swindlers, Sherwood, Cole and others.

Introduction

The purpose of this book was to make readily available to you, the researcher, all the lists of Gallia County Residents from the early years that can be located. It would be preferable to have the Personal Property Tax List for each year, as these usually contain more names, usually listing everyone over 16 who owned a horse or cow. These were also called Chattel Tax Lists, and are labelled as such in this book. Having several years of these Chattel or Personal Property Tax Lists back-to-back can be extremely helpful by revealing secrets such as what year a man died and the identity of his widow. Also if the person moved, you can confirm the year by checking the Personal Property Tax Lists at both locations (if available). The earliest such list found for Gallia County is the 1812 Personal Property Tax List, truly one of our most valuable treasures. The Chattel Tax lists for 1804 thru 1811 and 1813 thru 1817 are lost, but the 1818, 1819, 1821, 1822, 1824, and 1825 lists have been saved, and are transcribed within this book.

Transcriptions of the available Resident Proprietor Land Tax Lists for Gallia County are included in this book, when possible, to fill in for the missing Personal Property Tax List years. These lists contain considerably less names, but they were "Resident Proprietors" and it can be worthwhile to see where their land was located. Locations can easily be found by applying the Range, Township, and Section numbers to the boundary map. If a landowner died, his name on the Resident Proprietor Land Tax List usually was followed by {Heirs of} or {Estate}, and his wife's name may appear on the Personal Property Tax List. Also included with the 1806 thru 1816 Resident Proprietor Tax Lists, are lists of Wolf & Panther Scalp orders.

The included 1800 Census of Gallipolis Township helps create a picture of who lived here prior to the County's creation, while the 1820 Census of Gallia County adds the benefit of age group identification to the lists.

In summary, there are basically 4 types of Gallia Co. Resident lists put in chronological order within this book and labelled as follows:

- 1) Lands [1806 thru 1811 & 1813 thru 1817]
- 2) Chattels [1812, 1818, 1819, 1821, 1822, 1824, 1825]
- 3) Census [1800 & 1820]
- 4) Wolf & Panther Scalps [1806 thru 1816]

Gallia County Boundaries

Before Gallia became a county, it was surveyed as part of the large expanse called Washington County, Territory Northwest of the River Ohio. Using the information below and on the previous page, the researcher can easily find the location of land, as it was usually described in deeds & grants by Range, Township, and Section. Each full Township had 36 sections.

In 1803, Ohio became the 17th state admitted to the Union and in the spring of that year, eight new counties were created, including Gallia County. At this time Gallia County included most of present-day Lawrence County, much of present-day Jackson & Meigs Counties and part of present-day Vinton County. On May 10, 1803, Gallia County was divided into 3 townships: Gallipolis, Kyger, and LeTarts. The County & Township boundaries were subdivided many times since to become as they are today, closely resembling the 1883 boundaries shown on the map located on the preceding page.

LeTart Township

The name LeTart (or Letart) goes back well before the formation of Gallia County or even the formation of Washington County. It appears that the name most likely originated from James Le Tort, a Frenchman, who made trading expeditions with the Native Americans along the Ohio River as early as 1728. He was one of the first to follow the Delawares west of the Allegheny Mts. from Susquehanna and traded with the Native American towns all along the Ohio. Le Tort's Creek, Le Tort's Rapids, and Le Tort's Island were all apparently named for him. Le Tort's Rapids gradually became Letart's Falls, while Le Tort's Island became Letart's Island. Le Tort's Creek probably became Old Town Creek [now in Meigs Co.]; however, an old map laid out in 1751 thru 1754 shows "Letort's Creek" on the Virginia side of the Ohio in the vicinity of where Letart is now located. The town of Letart Falls [now in Meigs Co.] and the town of Letart [now in Mason Co., WV] came later.

Another source explains the tradition that a body of a Frenchman was found on the rapids, apparently drowned. The name "Letart" was said to have been tattooed on his arm. If this is true, could this have been James Le Tort? His name disappears from the records after 1742 when he was referred to as "Le Tort, the Indian trader at Allegheny." There was a record of a James Le Tort with Washington in 1754, as a member of Peter Hog's Company.

When Gallia County was formed in 1803, the new township containing this area was referred to as Letart's or LeTarts. Courthouse records & newspaper articles supported this spelling until the end of 1811, when the "s" was dropped and it became Letart, as it is still spelled today.

1812 Chattel Tax List Gallia County

Board of Commissioners: Orasha Strong
Joel Higley, Jr.
S. W. Blagg

Clerk of Commissioners: Nathaniel Gates

By the end of year 1811, Gallia County had been divided into 14 separate townships: Addison, Cheshire, Gallipolis, Green, Huntington, LeTart, Madison, Ohio, Raccoon, Rutland, Salisbury, Saline, Wilkes, and Union. Addison township was recently formed from Kyger & Gallipolis townships, while Cheshire was taken from Kyger. Huntington & Madison were apparently formed from Raccoon Twp., while Rutland & Wilkes were formed from Salisbury Twp. Saline Twp. was formed by 1810 and included areas in northern present-day Green Twp., southern present-day Springfield Twp., and possibly eastern Addison Twp. The name of Kyger Township no longer existed by 1812.

The Original tax duplicate of the 1812 Gallia County Personal Property Tax List can be found at the Gallia County Historical/General Society Headquarters. Names from this list were originally abstracted by Henrietta Evans and made available to us through the Society. This is one of the earliest known Personal Property Tax Lists in Ohio, and should be treasured by all who enjoy digging into the past. On the original list, the names are grouped according to township, surnames being grouped according to first letter. The surnames in this book are put in alphabetical order for easy referencing.

All names have been transcribed as closely as possible to the original, but of course there is the possibility of errors, and you may want to check the original. Note that several names are listed twice. This may be due to the fact that some people owned horses & cattle in more than one township. Also, it was very possible to have several people with the same name. In addition, names have been inserted from the 1812 Resident Land Tax List, if not found on the Chattel List.

WHERE TO FIND

THESE RECORDS WERE ABSTRACTED FROM BOTH THE COMMON PLEAS AND PROBATE COURTS. THE YEARS 1803-1845 ARE MISSING FROM THE COMMON PLEAS, SO THE EARLIEST VOLUMES ARE 4, 5, AND 6, 1846-1858. PROBATE COURT WAS ESTABLISHED IN 1858 SO AT THAT POINT WE SWITCHED TO THE JOURNALS FOUND THERE. WE WERE ORIGINALLY LOOKING FOR NATURALIZATION RECORDS AND KNEW THAT IN 1858 THEY WERE KEPT IN PROBATE SO THAT IS WHY WE USED COMMON PLEAS ONLY UP UNTIL THAT YEAR. THE PROBATE JOURNALS WE USED INCLUDE THE YEARS 1858-1899. THESE VOLUMES ARE CURRENTLY HOUSED IN THEIR RESPECTIVE COURTS AT THE GALLIA COUNTY COURT HOUSE.

ABSTRACT AND INDEX

ALL PERTINENT INFORMATION FOR THE GENEALOGIST WAS ABSTRACTED. THERE IS NO INDEX AS EACH SECTION WAS RELATIVELY BRIEF AND ALPHABETIZED.

SPECIAL NOTES FOR EACH SECTION

ALIMONY, BIGAMY, DIVORCE--IF REASONS WERE GIVEN, THEY HAVE BEEN INCLUDED. IF INDICATED, WE HAVE SHOWN WHETHER THE DIVORCE WAS FINALIZED; SOMETIMES A CASE WAS CONTINUED. WE ALWAYS SHOWED THE LATEST DEVELOPMENT IN THE CASE.

FERRY LICENSES--WHEN GIVEN WE INCLUDED THE LOCATION. AS LICENSES WERE GRANTED FOR ONLY ONE YEAR, THERE WERE OFTEN SEVERAL REFERENCES FOR THE SAME PERSON. WE USED INCLUSIVE DATES BUT ONLY THE FIRST REFERENCE.

MINISTERS--SOMETIMES IT WAS INDICATED THAT A PERSON HAD A LICENSE FROM SOME PLACE ELSE. THIS IS THE MEANING OF THE LOCATION LISTED IN PARENTHESES.

MINORS--THESE WERE CASES FOUND PRIMARILY IN COMMON PLEAS COURT AND WOULD NOT LIKELY HAVE BEEN INCLUDED IN BELL'S BOOK OHIO WILLS AND ESTATES, 1803-1850.

NATURALIZATIONS--AN "I." FOLLOWING A DATE INDICATES INTENT FILED RATHER THAN THE ACTUAL GRANTING OF CITIZENSHIP.

REVOLUTIONARY PENSIONS--ONLY A HANDFUL FOUND.

TAVERN LICENSES--IF THERE WAS MORE THAN ONE REFERENCE TO A LICENSE, WE USED INCLUSIVE DATES AND ONLY THE FIRST REFERENCE.
